PROTEST SENT BY GERMANY AGAINST INSULT TO COUNTRY

Words of New York Magistrate Trying Bremen Rioters Provoke Ire—All Other News Over-shadowed in German Press—Protest Is Sec-ond Provoked by July Melee

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7 (P).—A second protest from the German Government grew today from the July riot in which the Nazi flag was ripped from the mast of the Bremen—this one because of remarks attributed to the New York City magistrate who freed five men involved in the melee.

Like the other, the State Department promised to investigate. Today's protest was made by Ambassador Hans Luther under instructions from the German Foreign Office. He protested to the Department orally against what German officials considered an unwarranted "insult."

The Ambassador discussed the question with Secretary of State Cordell Hull for nearly an hour and declined any comment as he left the State Department.

State Department officials later let it be known that the Secretary had assured the Ambassador that Governor Herbert Lehman, of New York, would be asked for an immediate report. No answer is expected until some time next week.

The understanding here was that Ambassador Luther objected to remarks about the Nazi flag that were attributed to Magistrate Louis B. Brodsky.

The magistrate spoke of opinions held by "the defendants and others of our citizenry" that the Nazi flag flying in American territory had been provocation for the riot.

He said some citizens appeared to have been provoked through Continued on Page 6, Column 3

NO TRACE OF CHILD FOUND

Search Continues for Boy Who Vanished in Manitoba Woods

ST. NORBERT, Man., Sept. 7 (P).—A child's cry, heard by a woman on Thursday night, hours after five-year-old Jackie Pike disappeared in the woods near her home, spurred searches anew tonight in their hunt for the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Pike.

Police said a woman, who requested her name be withheld, informed them she heard a child crying near her home on the night the boy was reported missing. Weary searchers continued to pick their way through dripping wet clumps of brush in the hope that a torn garment might provide a clue to his whereabouts.

NO TRACE FOUND

No trace of the little child has been uncovered since his mother, picking blueberries a short distance away on Thursday afternoon, heard a stifled scream. When she reached the spot the little fellow had disappeared.

Every inch of the area has been combed. The muddy banks of the Red River, a mile from the spot where he disappeared, have been scanned for footprints in a faint belief that he may have wandered there.

An additional detachment strengthened the ranks of Royal Canadian Mounted Police. With volunteer farmers and neighbors assisting, in the hunt, police tonight moved in ever-widening circles throughout the district.

Loses Boat And Heavy Fish Catch

JUNEAU, Alaska, Sept. 7 (P).—With 8,000 pounds of fish aboard, the small tugboat Dalene hit an uncharted reef near Berners Bay and sank, Captain S. Anderson reported on his arrival here today.

His wife and one man, who accompanied the crew, escaped unharm-ed and were brought here by other fishermen.

Captain Anderson said he expected the boat could be raised.

PUMPKIN THRIVES BY ARTIFICIAL FEEDING

NOKOMIS, Sask., Sept. 7 (P).—Bert Gagger saw that a certain pumpkin in his garden was going to be a big one so he hastened its development. Slicing its stem, he inserted threads of yarn which led to a can full of sugar and water, the pumpkin lapping up the brew through the threads. On display today, it measured 46 inches around and weighed 35½ pounds.

Setting of Minimum Wheat Price Meets General Approval

Producers Cheered With Assurance of Profitable Prices for Product—Values Soar at Winnipeg and Chicago Markets

WINNIPEG, Sept. 7 (P).—Favorable and enthusiastic reaction from Western Canada tonight greeted the 1935 minimum price of 87½ cents a bushel for No. 1 Northern wheat, Fort William first news of the price-setting was given out by Premier Bennett on Friday night. First favorable reaction came to a three-cent jump in wheat futures quotations at Winnipeg.

PROFITABLE RETURNS

General opinion was that Prairie producers would be assured of profitable returns for their product, but coupled with this was the plea for setting of minimum prices for lower Johnny Albany and Jasper Charles, Esquimalt Indians, finished second, defeating "Bud" Wagner and Howard Russell, Vancouver contestants, in a great race from the grain elevator to the finishing line. The Mainlanders took third position. Gordon Henderson and Al Webb, Victoria, the only other entry, finished fourth after trailing all of the way.

Rules Man Has Right to Defend Property Against Illegal Seizure by Police

Chinese Freed of Assault Charge Arising From Fight To Save Potatoes

GROWER WINS ROUND IN MARKETING BATTLE

BRIGHOUSE, B.C., Sept. 7 (P).—Magistrate O. E. Darling in Richmond Police Court dismissed a charge of assault against Wong Yee, a Chinese grower, upholding defence counsel's contention that police officers have no legal right under the Marketing Act to seize potatoes in transit.

Wong was charged with assaulting Provincial Police Constable J. G. Green, but the magistrate held that the defendant had a legal right to defend his property from illegal seizure. There was nothing in the Marketing Act, the magistrate said, to provide for such seizure.

The encounter between Wong and the police officer took place at Marpole Bridge on August 13, when Continued on Page 3, Column 4

UNION AGAIN ASKS FOR CONFERENCE

Seamen Request Meeting for Discussion of Proposed Amendments to Agreements

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 7 (P).—The negotiating committee of the International Seamen's Union today went offshore and intercontinental shipping companies, requesting for the second time that a time be set for discussing proposed amendments to existing wage agreements.

In response to the first request, presented last week, the steamship companies flatly announced they would countenance no change in the agreements.

The communication pointed out that in refusing to listen to the demands, the companies were violating a specific provision of the award.

Leaders of Three Parties in Japan Seeking Purity in Politics

TOKIO, Sept. 7 (P).—Purification of politics is the prominent cry in the campaign preceding the local elections of September 21 and succeeding days when Japan's 12,651,925 qualified voters are asked to elect members of prefectural assemblies throughout the empire.

"Clean politics! No grafts! No corruptions!" This is the slogan and the leaders of three political parties in the campaign in the last thirty years have been without the demand for clean politics. On the present occasion the movement has every appearance of being stronger.

PARTY RESCUES CRASH VICTIM

Hope of Finding Long Missing Plane Party Revived By New Report

FAIRBANKS, Alaska, Sept. 7 (P).—Percy Hubbard, Fairbanks flyer, whose plane crashed Tuesday afternoon 100 miles up the Chena River as he was searching for his missing flying partner, Arthur Hines, was found late today by a rescue party of seven men and was being carried down the river to a landing field. His rescuers hoped to be able to transport him by plane to Fairbanks for medical treatment by tomorrow morning.

In the meantime search for Hines and his three passengers, who disappeared August 19 while on a trip from Dawson, Y.T., to Fairbanks, was spurred by the report of two prospectors, Conn Miller and Paddy Fitzpatrick, at Cordova, that they had seen what they thought to be a plane hanging from the trees at the head of the Tanana River. Pilot Ross, of Cordova, left to investigate.

The companions of Percy Hubbard on his flight, his brother, Russell Hubbard, mechanic, and A. J. Douglas, Fairbanks salesman, both suffering from severe injuries, walked thirty miles to reach a settlement to bring news of the accident and organize the rescue party. The trip took two days.

Small Fruits and Rhubarb Plan Has Fallen Through

SAANICH growers of small fruits and rhubarb were advised directly by Federal authorities yesterday that the proposed market control board in their products, recently balloted upon, would not be set up, in view of protest against the launching of the scheme. The poll was taken on August 12, some 800 growers balloting out of 1,500 producers, 1,300 of whom were registered.

CHILD DIES OF INJURIES

Four-Year-Old Jackie Allen Is Victim of Traffic Accident Here

Four-year-old Jackie Allen, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. V. Allen, 930 Fairfield Road, died in St. Joseph's Hospital last evening from injuries received in a traffic accident at the intersection of Port and Quadra Streets yesterday morning at 11:15 o'clock.

According to a report, obtained by police, the boy was attempting to cross Port Street when he was struck and run over by an automobile driven by Mrs. C. O. Maclean, 1020 Moss Street, who was proceeding east along Port. Two wheels of the car passed over the boy's body, eye witnesses to the accident state. The injured boy was rushed to hospital and attended by Dr. A. C. Sinclair.

It was at first thought the child was not seriously hurt, although he was suffering considerably from shock, but he became gradually worse towards evening and died shortly after 6 o'clock, presumably from internal injuries.

Flyer Makes Landing on Golf Course

SEATTLE, Sept. 7 (P).—Short of fuel, an airplane piloted by F. W. Gilbert, Vancouver, B.C., landed on the Olympic golf course eighteenth fairway as one party was teeing off and another foursome was on the green.

Buying more gasoline, Gilbert took off an hour later, after he had landed and landed at Boeing Airport for tomorrow's air show.

SAVES MAN FROM VANCOUVER THUGS

Arrival of Policeman Frightens Away Three Gunmen Holding Taxicab Driver

VANCOUVER, Sept. 7 (P).—The opportune arrival of Constable J. Booth saved Ernest Stiven, taxicab driver, from three gunmen who kidnapped him at midnight. The driver was held up by three men when he answered a call to the 190 Block West Eleventh.

After driving around some time the bandits stopped the car and forced Stiven to climb a fire escape on the Simon Fraser School. Reaching a landing, they compelled him to lie down while they bound him with strips of flannel.

At that moment, a police patrol car drew alongside the parked cab and the bandits fled. Stiven freed himself and recovered his cab.

Railways May Fight Removal of Running Rights Over Bridge

Interview Arranged With Government Over Province's Notice to Transportation Concerns to Cease Use of Fraser Bridge in 1938

RAILWAY objections to cancellation of a Provincial agreement giving three transportation companies running rights over the free traffic bridge at New Westminster will be argued before the Provincial Government this week by representatives of the companies concerned.

Premier Pattullo yesterday said he had been served on the Canadian National Railway, the Canadian Northern Railway and the British Columbia Electric Railway. The contracts, renewed by the Province in 1930, had federal years' notice, in 1938. Notice has Continued on Page 3, Column 3

Sub-Committee's Anxious Efforts at Geneva to Reach Settlement in Italo-Ethiopian Crisis Should Not Be Endangered—Various Compromise Solutions Rumored in Geneva

Pope Expresses Wish for Satisfaction With Justice

GENEVA, Sept. 7 (P).—What was in effect an appeal to Italy and Ethiopia not to resort to force for the time being was dispatched today as a League subcommittee of five nations strove to find a way out of war. The subcommittee, after a brief morning session, issued a communique stating that it "relies on the Governments concerned to refrain from any act that might compromise efforts."

As the week ended it appeared that the League's machinery had made but small progress on the steep and slippery road toward an Italo-Ethiopian solution.

Minister of Marine in Federal Cabinet

As the week ended it appeared that the League's machinery had made but small progress on the steep and slippery road toward an Italo-Ethiopian solution.

Optimists, however, could point out that the peace-makers had at least arrived at the formation of a small committee charged with continuation of the delicate task of conciliation. This responsibility is shouldered by representatives of Great Britain, France, Poland, Turkey and Spain.

The communique today was interpreted as an appeal to Italy and Ethiopia to avoid a resort to armed force. It is far from being a mutual pledge not to resort to armed force, however, which some delegates hoped the Council would demand from Italy and Ethiopia.

This fact emphasizes how completely Italy has preserved "freedom of action" towards Ethiopia, which its spokesman, Baron Pompeo Aloisi, frankly warned the Council would not be surrendered.

RUMORS OF COMPROMISE
The departure of Premier Laval of France for Paris and Anthony Eden of Britain for the Swiss capital for the week-end did not end rumors of various compromise solutions about to be offered to Italy. These included an offer to Italy of "international" occupation of Ethiopia and Italian air bases in Ethiopia.

The British delegation thus far has disclosed no enthusiasm for any of these reported schemes for satisfying Mussolini.

PREPARING FOR TREASURE HUNT

Ketch Being Outfitted at Vancouver for Cocos Island Expedition

VANCOUVER, Sept. 7 (P).—Hidden pirate treasure reputedly buried on Cocos Island, famed mound of rock jutting out of the Pacific Ocean, 400 miles off the west coast of Costa Rica, is again firing the ambition of a band of young Vancouver adventurers.

An expedition, headed by "Slim" Nicol, expects to leave late this month aboard the fifty-four-foot ketch, Windward, now being overhauled and outfitted.

Two other young Vancouver men, Jack McRae and Charlie Pearce, have signified their intentions of accompanying the expedition, and at least one other is expected to quest for the buried treasure.

IS FORMER R.C.M.P. OFFICER
The Windward is fifty-four feet long and has a fourteen-foot beam. She has two masts and a twenty-horsepower auxiliary motor, which enables her to make twelve knots an hour. She has a roomy cabin and sleeping accommodation for seven. Her owner, Nicol, was formerly a member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, stationed in Northern Canada.

The expedition is the fifth to be made from British Columbia in search of the treasure, said to exceed $50,000,000. Of this amount, $30,000,000 is reported to represent loot of Lima brought to the island for safe-keeping, following the revolution of 1833.

Cocos Island is crowned by twin peaks and walled by ramparts of unscalable rock. The island is about five miles in length and a little less in width.

CHANGES WATER INTO CAR FUEL

Dallas Inventor Has Device To Take Out Hydrogen To Drive Engines

DALLAS, Tex., Sept. 7 (P).—C. H. Garrett, Dallas inventor, gave a private demonstration today of a recently-patented contrivance, which, he said, substituted water for gasoline as fuel for internal combustion engines.

He said it broke up the water by electrolysis into its component gases, oxygen and hydrogen, using the highly-explosive hydrogen for fuel. The inventor said the idea itself was not new. He explained that difficulty had been encountered heretofore in attempts to store the inflammable hydrogen. He claimed to have avoided that trouble by making and exploding the gas in the same process.

EXPLAINS SYSTEM
Water, he explained, is broken down into its component gases by passage of an electric current through it from electrodes. The hydrogen, Garrett said, is mixed with air and introduced directly into the cylinders.

Garrett said attachment of the "electrolytic carburetor" and installation of a generator of about double normal capacity to furnish power for the breaking down of the water were the only changes needed to convert a gasoline-burning automobile into water-burner. He claimed instantaneous starting in any weather, elimination of fire hazards, cooler motor operation, and fulfilling of all motor requirements in power and speed.

LONDON, Sept. 7 (P).—Tommy Rose today won the King's-Cup handicap air race with an average speed of 178.3 miles an hour over the fifty-mile triangular course, which had to be covered seven times.

Flying Officer H. R. Edwards was second, averaging 157.84 miles an hour, and Calcraft Jones third with 157.32.

FLORIDA STORM DEAD CREMATED

Latest Tabulation Shows 743 Persons Dead, 424 in Hospitals and 281 Missing

MIAMI, Fla., Sept. 7.—Danger of pestilence in Florida's tragically-stricken coral keys was lessened tonight as flames flickered from scattered funeral pyres of storm dead. As quickly as Protestant, Catholic and Jewish clergymen could recite their church's rituals for the dead, workers applied the torch to the oil-drenched, badly decomposed victims of Monday's hurricane.

Sheriff D. C. Coleman, heading 500 workers in the storm area, estimated that 150 bodies were affected by the cremation order, issued when health officers saw disease imminent.

The latest tabulation of the storm's toll shows 743 persons dead, 424 in hospitals and 281 missing.

Take Over Established Hardware Store

LIEUT.-COL. H. E. GOODMAN MORLEY STUBBS FRED GOODMAN

LIEUT. COLONEL Goodman, of Regina, last week purchased Hatt's Hardware Shop from J. Morse Hatt. With him are associated Mr. Stubbs and his son, Fred Goodman. Lieut.-Colonel Goodman has had thirty years' experience in the wholesale hardware business, and Mr. Stubbs has been connected with the retail end for twenty years. Fred Goodman is a familiar figure in Canadian Rugby circles, having made his name with the Regina Roughriders.

daughter, Miss Kitty Goodman, will arrive here about the end of the month.

Associated with Lieut.-Col. Goodman is Morley Stubbs, who has had twenty years' experience in the retail hardware business in many parts of Alberta and Saskatchewan.

IN RUGBY CIRCLES
Fred Goodman, a son, also has his place in the firm. He is well-known in Canadian Rugby circles and for many years was heavy half-back with the Regina Rough Riders. He holds the record of having played more sixty-minute games than any other player on the famous team, and will probably take up Rugby here. His hobbies are fishing and golf.

Coast Hardware has been chosen as the name for the new firm, and the familiar large hammer sign erected by Mr. Hatt will be changed accordingly. A complete line of stoves, oil burners, shelf and heavy hardware will be carried, with addition of new lines from time to time. Store repair work of every description will also be undertaken. The same general policy as that of Mr. Hatt will be carried out.

Lieut.-Col. Goodman's hobby is golf. He intends to take up fishing and shooting as soon as he and his family are established.

APPEAL ISSUED TO REFRAIN FROM FIGHT

regarded as an indication of ultimate peace.

Luigi Vinco-Gigliucci, the Italian minister, in giving the order, explained that the great distances and lack of communications made it desirable to remove the consuls from possible danger zones, adding that it would take some of them several weeks to reach the capital by horseback.

(A Government spokesman in Rome said Vinco-Gigliucci acted on his own initiative in view of the unsettled conditions and not under orders of the Foreign Office.)

The recall, it was believed certain, would not only disturb Ethiopians but also foreigners in the interior. The Italian minister told the Ethiopian foreign minister he believed his action would prevent a recurrence of alleged incidents involving mistreatment of consuls.

SUMMARILY REJECTED
A French suggestion of the possibility of an Italian protectorate over Ethiopia has been summarily rejected by Ethiopian unofficial sources as beyond all discussion.

Most Ethiopians also indignantly opposed a proposal attributed Premier Laval of France to place Ethiopia under a police force, similar to the former one in the Saar.

The Italian Ministry shipped a large quantity of legation property, including furniture, paintings, china and silver plate, to Italy today.

Some of the foreign legations are rapidly building bomb-proof shelters, protective trenches and emergency pits.

The 129 newly-arrived bearded and turbaned Indian Sikhs, here to guard the British legation, camped in the wooded compound of the legation tonight. Recovering from their first chilling in the rain-drenched mountain capital, the Sikhs began digging trenches, mounting machine guns and cleaning their rifles.

In order to avoid possible incidents with natives, the Punjabis will be kept strictly within the compound.

ROME, Sept. 7 (AP).—Pope Pius expressed the desire today that Italy's "needs" in Ethiopia "shall be satisfied" but urged that it be done with "justice and with peace."

Fair Attendance Records Big Gain For Opening Day

A SEVENTY-FIVE per cent increase in the attendance figures at the Provincial Fair here on the opening day of this year compared with the opening day last year was reported by William H. Davies, gate manager, after the Willows grounds were closed last night. Yesterday there were 2,865 paid admissions, and on the ratio of five attending to every paid admission, the total attendance is estimated at 14,325. All children are admitted free. The five-to-one ratio includes the children, holders of passes and exhibitors. On the opening day last year, the paid admissions were 1,897, or an estimated total attendance of 9,485.

years, the Pontiff struck an optimistic note.

"From our later information, we seem to see forming on the horizon a rainbow of peace casting its rays across the world," he said.

Pope Pius came here from his summer retreat at Castel Gandolfo to celebrate a Mass for an international convention of Great War veterans.

"We desire that with peace the aspirations of this good people, all their needs shall be satisfied, recognized and assured," he said, referring to Italy, "but with justice and against justice there is only sin and sin makes the people miserable."

A RAINBOW OF PEACE
His statement on the possibility of peace in full:

"It is with considerable joy that if we have understood from our latest information, we seem to see on the horizon a rainbow of peace which seems to diffuse its rays over the world."

"This is peace made of justice, charity, honor, dignity and respect for all rights."

"It is peace which announces happiness for everybody. Peace is the primary condition for all prosperity, and therefore we shall always pray for peace."

All the world sighs for peace, all the world desires peace, and for us the Vicar of Christ, for us the common father of all souls, it is our task to procure peace with all means."

"To maintain it is a particular duty, an essential duty."

In conclusion he asserted: "It is plain."

with this marvelous vision in mind that we bless you."

"MYSTERIOUS SUPPORT"
ROME, Sept. 7 (AP).—The Giornale d'Italia said tonight groups of armed Senegals (a North African Moslem sect), are concentrating on the border of Libya, an Italian possession, with "mysterious support."

In an article directed against British influence in Egypt, The Giornale demanded to know who is furnishing the Senegals with arms and favoring their "aggressive" designs.

The newspaper said the Senegals were hired fighting tribes who fled across the border into Egypt following the domination of Libya by Italian troops.

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 7 (AP).—Japan will maintain strict neutrality in the Italo-Ethiopian struggle if it turns into war, Admiral Isamu Taketaka said here today.

The Japanese naval chief said his party are en route to New Orleans as special guests of the forthcoming national convention of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

SETTING OF WHEAT PRICE IS APPROVED

REACTION AT CHICAGO
CHICAGO, Sept. 7 (AP).—Revelation of Canada's latest plan to bring her wheat farmers prosperity stimulated sharp wheat price upturns in world markets today.

Canadian wheat producers, normally competitors with United States farmers for world trade, are to be guaranteed a minimum of $1.2 cents per bushel for their 1935 grain.

Announcement last night of this price, of world-wide importance because many importing countries are believed looking to Canada for breadstuffs, stirred grain-market bulls. The minimum was higher than most traders had expected.

LITERATURE AND ART ARE SUBSIDIZED

Extensive Programme Made Possible in U.S. by President Roosevelt

RELIEF EMPLOYMENT IS ON WIDE SCALE

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7 (AP).—President Roosevelt placed $27,315,217 at Harry L. Hopkins' disposal today for one of the most extensive programmes for subsidizing literature and the arts in the history of governments.

Approval of Comptroller-General J. R. McCarl for the work relief allotment was given after a month's delay. The project, intended to provide six months' employment for more than 30,000 writers, painters, musicians and actors, is to get under way next week.

BOOKS ARE CLOSED
The public works administration announced, coincidentally, that with 5,500 applications on hand calling for allotment of a billion dollars, it had closed its books to further requests.

Bruce McClure, head of the W.P.A. division of professional service projects, will direct activity in the literature drive.

Chief activity of the writers will be the preparation of an American guidebook, the first since 1909, which will be printed in five volumes, covering the entire country and selling for "a nominal sum." The writers also will aid in telling the story of the work relief programme, preparing an encyclopedia of Government functions and carry on a small number of research projects.

TO TEACH APPRECIATION
The musicians and actors, in addition to giving performances, will attempt to develop more expert audiences by teaching appreciation in schools and elsewhere.

Large units will be established in strategically-located production centres, while medium-sized production units, built around fifteen or twenty actors, will be set up in other centres.

Similar employment had been provided these professional classes under both the C.W.A. and old relief administration work programme, but not on so comprehensive a scale.

In addition, a large number of survey and census projects have been started for white-collar workers with no particular skill.

Announcing a Change of Ownership

THIS week Victoria's best-known hardware store ceases to be known as Hatt's Hardware and becomes The Coast Hardware. Mr. H. E. Goodman, formerly of Regina, has purchased the business, and it will continue under his direction.

In transferring the ownership of this business to Mr. Goodman, Mr. Hatt wishes to thank the many hundreds of Victorians who have made this store their headquarters for hardware needs and bespeaks a continuance of their patronage for The Coast Hardware. They will find that Mr. Goodman thoroughly understands their requirements, because he comes to Victoria with almost thirty years' experience in the hardware business.

Art Department At Willows Has Much Attraction

Wide Diversity of Talent Among Victoria Artists, Adult and Juvenile, Displayed in Exhibition at Provincial Fair

SOME other preoccupation must have temporarily distracted the majority of the regular exhibitors in the non-competitive section of the art department at the Provincial Exhibition at the Willows this year. Although the pictures shown are of the very highest standard, the number is relatively small compared with last year and some previous exhibitions.

Nevertheless, a visit to this section is well worth while, for in addition to this non-competitive display, there is a fine gallery of "competitive art," water colors, oils, crayons, pastels, china painting, pottery, wood carving, embossed or tooled leather, fretwork, and even model airplanes.

In the non-competitive section, staged merely for exhibition purposes, are found such familiar names as Arthur Cheeky, who has about a dozen very fine oils of scenic subjects, treated with characteristic strength; Morris Aiken, who has sent three or four very fine flower pictures and a portrait of a Hawaiian girl; Patience Birley, whose pastels of dogs and horses are most delightful work; Maude Lettice, Amy Adamson, T. S. Gore, Rose Willis, T. Bamford, Will Menelaws, P. M. Young and L. Sweeney, all of whom have something worth viewing—garden or coast scenes, portraits, Californian valley or mountain scenes, sailing craft, etc.; while F. Barker and Ida Unthoff may claim the distinction of having about the largest oil canvases, the former being the only exhibitor showing Indian portraits.

CARVING AND POTTERY
In the same part of the hall is the pottery exhibit (non-competitive). There are three tables filled with bowls, jugs, vases, statuettes, lamp shades, fruit plates, and other articles of practical or merely ornamental character. The local pottery group some time ago attained its maximum in the matter of fine standard of design, glaze and coloring, and this is a representative collection. A big earthen bird-bath on a three-foot pedestal, is something of a departure in practical design, and suggests a line that might be turned to commercial advantage.

Nearby is a most interesting bit of craftsmanship: two Indian model or three competitors chose their favorite (apparently) movie actors, as the subject of their competitive drawings! or paintings. Another artist had submitted a very well drawn panel of the Dionne quintuplets. Still another had chosen Lawrence of Arabia. A large portrait of Robert Burns, in pen and ink, suggested that some Scotoman had given up to affection for this poet, although there was no means of identifying the artist, the registration cards not being opened until after the adjudication of the work.

AIRPLANE MODELS
It is a healthy sign of the times that boys are taking an interest in airplane assembling. Four or five admirably executed models are shown, quite advantageously hung from the ceiling.

Around the three walls at the other end of the gallery, in the Manufacturers' Building, is the competitive art display. This had not been judged yesterday, but visitors could draw their own conclusions about the respective merits and interest of the several exhibits.

Among the most interesting work were the Canadian and British Columbia product maps. This reflects a series of diminutive drawings of cattle, fruit, wild animals, minerals, grains, etc., which are to be found in the province. The lettering, as well as the drawing on this particular map, were conspicuously good.

FAVORITE STARS
Moving about the display one was struck by the betrayal of individual hobbies. For example, two

RIGHT IN DEFENDING AGAINST SEIZURE

Wong was hauling potatoes to Vancouver. It was one of numerous recent clashes between police and Chinese wishing to take—like the potatoes into Vancouver contrary to the provisions of the Marketing Act. J. Pitcairn Hogg, counsel for Wong, argued that police had no legal right to seize potatoes in transit and that under Section 56 of the Criminal Code Wong had a legal right to defend his property from illegal seizure.

ENTITLED TO PROTECTION
For the prosecution it was claimed that Constable Green was carrying out orders of his superior officer and was entitled to protection from assault.

The magistrate upheld the argument of defence counsel and held that superior officers had no legal right to order subordinates to commit illegal acts.

On Thursday last Mr. Justice Robertson in Supreme Court in Vancouver, refused judgment on the application of J. P. Hogg, who sought on behalf of Mah Bing an interlocutory injunction restraining the British Columbia Vegetable Marketing Board from interfering with the Chinese in the marketing of his potatoes.

Students Held by Chinese Officials

PEIPING, Sept. 7 (AP)—An investigation was offered tonight into reports of the detention by provincial authorities in Northwest Kanai of two students, a Canadian and an American.

Foreign advisers said H. Desmond Martin, of Montreal, twenty-four, and John De Francis, also twenty-four, of New Haven, Conn., were detained when they sought to proceed toward Lanchow, a Communist stronghold. Their students' travel passports were said to have been taken.

Would-Be Robber Shot by Own Gun

CALGARY, Sept. 7 (AP)—A two-gun bandit failed in an attempt to hold up a branch of the Royal Bank of Canada at Langdon, Alta., this morning.

Instead, he accidentally shot himself in the leg, and within a few hours was lodged in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police cells here.

He gave his name as Charles Donald Nesault, twenty, of Saskatoon.

SAYS CITY HAS BEST GARDENS

Dr. C. H. Tozier, Boston, Saw Nothing to Compare With Them in Antipodes

"Nowhere in all Australia or beautiful New Zealand are there such magnificent gardens as are found in Victoria," enthusiastically declared Dr. Charles H. Tozier, aboard the R.M.S. Niagara yesterday afternoon, shortly after the vessel came alongside the Outer Wharf. He visited the Antipodes for several weeks and is now on the way to his home in Boston.

Each summer for several years past, Dr. Tozier, a Boston physician, has come to Victoria to photograph the beauty of the city and its gardens. Several months ago he stayed for a week at the Empress Hotel, and during that time took some 200 colored photographic plates of flowers, gardens and the surrounding country. He also took many hundreds of feet of colored motion picture film.

Using the most modern photographic equipment, which brings out the natural color of flowers—needing absolutely no "touching up" with watercolor—Dr. Tozier has gathered a priceless collection. These pictures will be shown throughout the Eastern United States this Fall and Winter.

Among tourist bureaus in Canada and the United States, Dr. Tozier is known as "Victoria's best booster."

Not long ago in Boston a near-riot occurred when several hundred persons attempted to push their way into an all-ready filled auditorium in which the physician-photographer was showing slides of Vancouver Island he related with a smile yesterday.

Dr. Tozier stated that Mexico-City residents and hundreds of delegates to the recent Rotary International Convention there crowded each other for three nights to view his pictures of Victoria's gardens. He explained the Mexicans prided themselves on their gardens, but were astounded with the beauty that was to be seen in Victoria.

When asked about his tour of the Antipodes and what he thought of the gardens he had seen there, Dr. Tozier smiled broadly and commenced to praise local gardens and paid tribute to R. P. Bulchart for creating such places of beauty and throwing them open to the public. He lauded the gardens of Lady Barnard, E. D. Todd, those in front of the Legislative Buildings, and the Empress Hotel gardens.

THOUSANDS CROWD WILLOWS GROUNDS

Junior Chamber of Commerce, under whose auspices the race was conducted, introduced Alderman Hunter to the audience.

In his remarks, Alderman Hunter referred to the institution of the canoe event last year, and recalled the unfavorable weather conditions under which it was held then. However, this year, he said, more favorable conditions could not have been wished for, and he felt certain that the race would become a well-established event. He congratulated the Junior Chamber of Commerce and all officials who helped organize the race, and complimented each successive trophy winner on his success.

GIVEN SHIELD
To Able and Jumbo Davies was presented a challenge shield, which has to be won three times in succession in order to obtain permanent possession. The winners of the race also were presented with individual silver cups. Able and Jumbo won the race in a locally-built canoe, made from Vancouver Island products. They were sponsored by George (Joker) Patton.

John Albany and Jasper Charles, two Indian paddlers, were presented with two smaller silver cups for coming in second, while "Bud" Wagner and Harry Russell, of Vancouver, were given still smaller cups for finishing third. Alf Webb and Gordon Henderson, of Victoria, were presented with fountain pen sets for finishing fourth.

Following the presentation, fireworks display started. For half an hour the crowd was treated to a continuous display of lights and deafening bombs. Fountains of fiery jewels, water fountain, Niagara Falls, spinning wheels, windmills and Roman candle displays were some of the ground pieces, while aerial displays of colored rockets interspersed the setting off of the field pieces. The pyrotechnics were brought to a close with the firing of a field piece spelling out the words "good night" in varied colors of fire.

CROWDED MIDWAY

After this display, the crowd wandered its way to the midway and to the exhibition buildings. It was difficult to walk along the midway when this crowd was released. There was a jam of humanity along the "white way" as groups congregated around the various games of chance, the speakers.

Coast Guard Ship Hurrying to Aid of Crippled Schooner

Seth Parker Leaking Badly With Damaged Pumps Barely Able to Keep Craft Afloat—Crew of Fifteen Without Food

HONOLULU, Sept. 7 (P).—With damaged pumps combating rising water in her hold, and with no food for her crew of fifteen, the schooner Seth Parker, once the world cruise boat of Phillips Lord, American radio entertainer, today awaited arrival of coast guard aid.

The coast guard patrol boat Tiger wireless headquarters here that she expected to reach the Seth Parker, 600 miles southeast of Honolulu, Sunday night. The schooner called for help yesterday. Frank Eckman, captain of the Seth Parker, described the latest misfortune to strike his craft in a wireless message to the coast guard late last night. He said:

PUMPS NEARLY GONE
"Clock shows we are taking four or five feet of water per day in smooth sea and double that in choppy. All pumps need repairs. No repair material left. Pumps have been working continuously since leaving Pago Pago. We can't afford to let the pumps go out. Main pump now beyond repair. As long as pumps work there is no alarm. However, these may stop any minute. Electric power is in danger of being put out by bilge water, so if our radio should stop, it would be due to this. Pumps may get into Honolulu. If so, O.K."
Commander William Derby, aboard the coast guard cutter Itasca here, said the Seth Parker was "in a normally calm zone" and should not experience heavy weather. The Itasca received the Seth Parker's message and relayed it to the Tiger.

STRING OF MISFORTUNES
Some time ago, after the world cruise became one long string of misfortunes, Lord sold the Seth Parker to the Hawaiian Tuna Packers for conversion into a bait carrier here, and came to Honolulu from Samoa aboard a passenger ship.
Christian R. Holmes, president of the company which now owns the schooner, said she could make little progress in her present damaged condition. The topmast was blown off several weeks ago near Samoa.
"My only concern is for the safe arrival of the crew," Holmes said. "I doubt if I'll use the schooner after she arrives, or at least until after a thorough inspection by Government officials."

BARGAIN FARES ON SALE AGAIN

Patronage Extended Excursions Up-Island Is Reason For Next Week's Offer

Favored with such generous patronage on the three occasions during the present season, when bargain fares enabled Vancouver Islanders in all sections to travel at extremely low rates, the management of the Esquimalt & Nanaimo Division of the Canadian Pacific Railway has decided to offer another opportunity for those who may want to repeat the experiences they enjoyed on one or other of the former occasions, as well as giving others who were unable to take advantage of the excursion rates in June, July and August, the chance of spending several days at some Vancouver Island resort or visiting friends in some Up-Island community.

There is no better month to be about in the open on Vancouver Island than September. Now everything is at its best, and a trip, by rail to any part discloses a lot of beauty, while the low cost of travel for the days set apart by the company for these bargain fares offers the residents of communities as far away as Cumberland and Port Alberni a chance to come into Victoria and take a look at the capital city.

The dates set apart for the September bargain fares are September 20 to September 24. Tickets will be good going on Friday and Saturday, September 20 and 21, with the return limit good up to and including Tuesday, September 24. They will be on sale during the coming week.

MYSTERY PLAY IS ANNOUNCED

Little Theatre Association Will Produce Lamb's "Ten Minute Alibi"

The first play of the forthcoming season, to be presented by the Victoria Little Theatre Association, will be the thrilling murder drama, "Ten Minute Alibi." This was decided at an executive meeting held recently, and rehearsals are already under way. The cast of the play will include Noel Cusack, Bill Lambert and Bert Bailey in principal roles. The play will be under the direction of Mr. Lamb, whose last play, "The Play's the Thing," received such enthusiastic comment. Plans have been completed for the opening meeting of the association on Tuesday at the clubrooms. Mrs. Hetherington, the association's president, has announced that the club will adopt a new policy this year, and that meetings will not be restricted to members only. Those followers of the legitimate stage who would like to express an opinion in connection with the development of the drama in Victoria are invited to attend the meetings. The club is considering an expansion this year, which may result in its staging plays in regular theatre surroundings, and full information as to this move will be given at Tuesday night's meeting.

PROTEST SENT BY GERMANY TO U.S.

"flouting of an emblem which symbolizes all that is antithetical to American ideals of the God-given and inalienable right of all peoples to life, liberty and pursuit of happiness." Brodsky also was quoted as expressing views held by the "prominent display of this emblem even carried with it the same sinister implications as a pirate ship, sailing defiantly into the harbor of a nation, one of whose ships it had just scuttled, with the black flag of piracy proudly flying aloft." While the German Government made no reference to the freeing of the five men charged with having torn down the Bremen's flag and thrown it in the Hudson River, it was said the New York Magistrate's remarks could not be overlooked.

GERMANS ARE UPSET
BERLIN, Sept. 7 (AP)—Germany lashed out today at the decision of Magistrate Louis D. Brodsky, of New York, in releasing the six Bremen rioters, who recently tore the Nazi flag from the ship's mast. Calling the act an insult to the German flag and American justice, a Foreign Office organ said: "If this Judge speaks for American justice, the German people feel deeply wounded." The entire press bitterly assailed the Brodsky decision, columns on the subject overshadowing all other news. Ordinarily sedate papers bristled with strong language.

REGINA DOING WELL
REGINA, Sept. 7 (AP)—Public utilities in Regina piled up a surplus of $244,925 in the first eight months of 1935, against a surplus of $217,039 in the same period of last year. City tax collections increased $92,803 in the same period to $1,372,349.

NO MORE WORK FOR ME!

NO MORE DIRT FOR ME!

Automatic gas furnaces on "Pay Like Rent" plan only $3.75 month!

No wonder the Fergusons are cheering... they're set for the rest of their lives. This new "Pay Like Rent" plan was right down their alley, and the $3.75 a month just fits their six-room house and their housekeeping budget.

Says Jim...

"Some fun!... Just sit upstairs and smoke... no more shoveling, splitting, kindling or hauling ashes... The yearly cost is darn low, too, when you consider everything. Bob Thompson, across the street, put in an automatic gas furnace last year and his total bill was only $70, and mine'll be lower because we've got an easier house to heat. Bob turned his basement into a swell playroom... I think I'll go him one better and build a little radio bar in mine... It'll be swell for Marj, too... when I'm at the office she won't have any coal heaving to do."

Says Marj...

"What a treat!... No more soot and smoke... no more tracking dirt upstairs... no more freezing in the middle of a bridge game... no more running up and down stairs all day... It'll give Jim more time to work in the garden and he can build me a dandy little laundry room in the basement! What's more, the whole thing won't cost as much as he spends on golf every month."

Say We...

Many home-owners have already taken advantage of this timely new purchase plan. You pay three months in advance when you install the equipment ($11.25* for an average six-room house)... and no more payments are called for until three months have passed. There is a fair allowance for your present furnace or sawdust burner and the total cash price of a new gas heating plant suitable for a six-room house is $228*, which includes everything, such as piping, upstairs thermostat, etc... providing adaptation of the present warm-and-cold-air ducts is practical.

Free Survey and Estimate

Phone our Gas Department at Garden 7121 for a free home survey and estimate on complete installation and operating costs for your home. There is no obligation whatsoever and our heating engineers' estimates are extremely accurate.

*May be more or less according to size of house.

Women's Work Is Of High Standard And Great Variety

Colonial Room in Women's Building at Willows Exhibition Is of Special Interest—Rugs and Basketry Attract Great Interest

THERE are few displays at the Provincial Exhibition at the Willows which represent more hours of concentrated effort than that which is housed in the Women's Building. Hundreds and thousands of stitches, knitted, crocheted, and needlework have gone into the completion of the excellent collection of handwork which is being shown this year.

The majority of the classes are up to standard in quantity and with few exceptions, all surpass in quality those of former years. This is particularly true of the knitting displays, for since the knitting craze took such a strong hold upon feminine fingers, the quality of work has greatly improved and knitters vie with each other in producing articles of ever more varied and intricate pattern.

Again in the hand-made rugs class, the work shows much improvement, both in the workmanship itself and in a more pleasing choice of color and design. Some of the hooked rugs are particularly beautiful. Though hardly competing among the larger rugs, there is a most interesting exhibit, a small oblong rug, the wool of which was hand-spun on her own spinning wheel by the exhibitor, from Anzora sheep. The rug had been obtained from roots,

LOCAL DYES

It is interesting to note those which have been used to produce the soft colorings. Yellow was obtained from the leaves of Saskatoon bushes and goldenrod flowers; blue from Columbine flowers; brown from Saskatoon berries; Indian ink and blueberries; green from the plant nasturtium and delphinium; pink from bedstraw; northern roots; purple, blueberries, bearberries and honeysuckle; fawn, wild violets (whole plants); grey, dock root.

The thrift class contains many useful garments which have been made, and show ingenuity in adapting materials to suit clothing to the needs of children.

Defiant fingers of ladies over seventy years of age have made many remarkably fine pieces of work such

Is Returning to Toronto

MISS JANE MCCALLUM

Elder daughter of Dr. and Mrs. J. S. McCallum, of Esquimalt, will leave on Tuesday for Toronto, where she will continue her studies in commercial art.

As rugs, knitted garments and even fine embroidery and crochet work. There is a big entry in the crochet section and among the beautiful examples of work are some exquisite dinner and tea cloths in flax, crocheted gloves and lace and among the embroidered articles are tea cozies, dresses, tray cloths and beautiful drawn-thread work.

ARTS AND CRAFTS

Among the arts and crafts are hats made of crocheted crepe paper, door stops, and embroidered pictures. One of these will doubtless be an heirloom of the future with a historic background, for the portrait of His Majesty the King has been set in a frame round which have been embroidered flags and flowers, the date of the Silver Jubilee year being worked at the top. Among the mounted trays is one showing a charming floral pattern arrangement of the wild flowers of Vancouver Island, and a cleverly made lampshade is superimposed with pressed wild erythroniums and leaves.

There is a tempting array of bottled fruits, meats and vegetables, decorated cakes which are masterpieces of art, cakes, pies, loaves of bread and buns, all of such good quality that the task of the judges will be no easy one.

COLONIAL ROOM

Upstairs the display arranged by the Women's Institute and the Weavers' Guild is attracting a great deal of attention. It is without question the most attractive display of its kind ever put on in Victoria. The north half of the upper floor has been arranged to represent a Colonial bed-sitting room, and the rough hewn rafters of the building add a picturesque note in the setting. There a number of looms have been set up, some made by Mr. E. Smart and others by Mr. Ivor Austin. There is a carding machine which greatly eases the task of the worker, baskets, chairs, samples of woven materials in wool and linen, hand-woven curtains and bedspreads, spinning wheels and other examples of handwork, all of the finest workmanship and displayed to splendid advantage.

Through the courtesy of the Standard Furniture Company, a four-post bed of British Columbia maple and matching chest of drawers and dressing table have been arranged in one corner, and the bedspread, woven by Mrs. Findlay, of Lake Hill, is a charming piece of work. A blanket, also hand-woven by Mrs. Findlay, is also on the bed.

WOVEN MATERIALS

There is a beautiful rug woven by Mrs. Foster, of Mayne Island; hand-woven curtains in shades of orange and soft greens by Mrs. A. Sherman and Mrs. Thompson, Mrs. Howell and Mrs. Austin. Mrs. Gilling is exhibiting some attractive woven "jazz" belts and a sweater made from wool which she spun and dyed herself. Mrs. Carmichael is showing a pair of beautiful woven curtains of a warm rust shade; Mrs. J. L. White, who is in charge of the whole ex-

WOMEN'S INSTITUTES

VIMY

Vimy Institute met at the home of the president, Mrs. T. C. Robson, on Friday afternoon.

Thanks were received from Queen Alexandra Solarium for hats made by Mrs. Grace Lee, and donated by Vimy W.I. A satisfactory report was received of the recent craft party. Mrs. E. R. Weismüller was elected delegate to the district conference to be held in Victoria in October. Mrs. C. Moss, O.B.E., an honorary member of Vimy Institute, was guest of honor at tea following the meeting, when she gave an inspiring talk to the members. Regret at the removal of Mrs. Moss to England was expressed by the president, and Mrs. G. Cleough, Mrs. W. D. Wilkin presenting a bouquet of flowers to which was attached a shower of handkerchiefs. Mrs. Cleough poured tea, Mrs. Weismüller assisting the hostess in serving. Miss Geroline Homfray, nursing supervisor of Cowichan Hospital Centre was a guest at the tea hour.

DAILY DEMONSTRATIONS

Mr. I. B. Arnold has made an ingenious little bedside lamp in the form of a perfect little model of a spinning wheel, an ideal novelty for a Colonial bedroom. The hand-painted candlesticks are by Mrs. E. S. Blair and a paper tray and vase by Mrs. Day.

During the week there will be demonstrations of the treadle and table looms which will be of great interest to those for whom there old-time crafts are proving of such absorbing interest.

From Salaspur and Mayne Islands there are some beautiful hand-made rugs, and in this section, in particular, the progress which is being made by amateur workers is noticeable. Among the quilts are many lovely patchwork examples, the fan pattern being a favorite. The basketry is among the most interesting displays on the upper floor of the Women's Building and these by the Women's Institutes have entered the competitive class with a number of beautiful pieces of work of various kinds.

St. Mark's Church Scene Of Marriage Ceremony

Asters and gladioli, in shades of pink and white, predominated in the decorations in St. Mark's Church last evening, when Rev. O. L. Jull officiated at a very pretty wedding—the principals being Dorothy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Pengelly, of Maple Bay Road, Duncan, and of Carey Road, Sanich, and Mr. William Askey, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. John S. Askey, 224 Battleford Avenue, who was supported by his brother, Mr. Fred Askey. The bride's attendants were her sisters the Misses Margerie and Olive Pengelly.

Mrs. P. W. L. Moore presided at the organ, and during the service Miss Bernice Unwin sang "Because" and "At Dawning". Mr. Pengelly gave his daughter in marriage, and she looked charming in a gown of a delicate tea rose shade, with which she wore a blue mohair hat, an off-white face model, trimmed with a pink and blue bow at the back, and carried a shower bouquet of pink roses, gardenias and awaionia. The bridesmaids were dressed alike in frocks of royal blue taffeta, which reached to the top of their toes, with large pink taffeta bows at the back, and they wore Juliet capes of taffeta edged with daisies and forget-me-nots tied with a bow.

Wedding Anniversary

Marked in Vancouver

An occasion of much interest to many Victorians and former residents of Alberta and Manitoba took place recently at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Robertson, 2525 Thirtieth Avenue, W., Vancouver, when a host of relatives and friends gathered to extend their hearty good wishes to the host and hostess on the occasion of their golden wedding.

The former bride, a daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Stead, of Cartwright, Man., and sister of the Canadian author, Robert Stead, and Mr. Robertson were married August 19, 1885, at Cartwright, by the late Rev. Dr. James Farquharson.

Canadian Parsons Pass From Pulpit To Party Politics

More Christian Ministers of Western Canada Are Candidates for Parliament Than in East—Four Alberta Preachers Elected as Social Credit Supporters

By Rev. Dr. J. K. UNWORTH

WHY are there so many preachers going into politics? And should they? Should they interpret their ordination vows to include service as legislators? If they do become electoral candidates, should they first resign from their individual congregations? Is the ministerial invasion of Canada's political life going to be helpful or otherwise? For the Church? For the State? If not, why not? If so, why so?

Such questions as these are being much talked of, and are worth discussion. But having voiced them, the writer does not intend to try to answer them. That does not come within his jurisdiction, but belongs to those privileged people who say their say on page four of this journal. The business of comment and argument is given to the editor, to the columnist R.E.D., and to the group of reporters whose bright eyes scan life through the windows of the Observation Car at the corner of Broad and View Streets. To the present writer falls the humbler task of supplying information on this intriguing subject. To this he now proceeds.

It is Western Canada, including British Columbia, rather than Eastern Canada, that has supplied and is offering to supply preachers to the country's legislative halls. From Winnipeg to Victoria the urge of Canadian parsons to pass from the pulpit to party politics seems to be decidedly stronger than from Fort William to Halifax. In fact, the Maritimes have put up no ecclesiastical candidates. Nor has Quebec, with the exception, if it may be termed one, of George S. Mooney, Y.M.C.A. secretary at Verdun, Que., as a C.C.F. candidate.

ON THE SCENE OF NEWS

Crossing the Ottawa, the reporter gets on the scene of news. In Ontario the political fever has affected the ministerial ranks. There was Canon H. A. Cody, the noted Anglican preacher of Toronto, who was Minister of Education for the Province of Ontario. At the last provincial election, Rev. Dr. George A. Little, head of the United Church Sunday School Publications, ran as an independent candidate in Toronto. Mr. Lauchlin Curran, a returned missionary from Japan, ran in C.C.F. interests at Kitchener, Ont. Both were defeated.

West of the Great Lakes, the matter of getting this old world on the right track by legislative action has made a strong appeal to a number of ministers of the Gospel. The pioneer province of Manitoba has been a pioneer in providing political parsons. The outstanding name is of course, the head of the Canadian Co-operative Commonwealth party in the Federal House, Rev. J. S. Woodsworth, for years a minister of the Methodist Church, and himself the son of the renowned super-

Rev. J. L. Maxwell, a Presbyterian and a Liberal, represented Vancouver in the Dominion House in 1896-1902. Rev. J. C. Stacey, a Methodist minister, of Chilliwack, a Conservative, was elected from Fraser Valley in 1917 in the interests of the Union Government.

In the local Legislature, Rev. Thomas Menzies, a Presbyterian, was member for Comox in the Oliver Government. Rev. Canon Joshua Hinchcliffe was Minister of Education in the Tolmie regime. Rev. Dr. A. M. Sanford, a professor in Union College, Vancouver, also ran on the same ticket, but unsuccessfully.

At the turnover two years ago, a ministerial group was in the running for a seat across the Bay. Only one arrived: Rev. Robert Connell, leader of the C.C.F. opposition, an Anglican, who had been minister at St. Saviour's Church in this city, later a teacher and a writer, though preaching occasionally, as a local still. Rev. W. T. Allen, United Church pastor at Cumberland, a C.C.F. candidate, was defeated, as was also Dr. Clem Davies, minister of the City Temple, a community church of this city, who ran as an Independent.

All candidates in B.C. from the ecclesiastical side, who have thus far been listed for the people's vote and suffrage for the Federal House, are fighting under the banner of Socialism. They are: Rev. E. M. Mackay, a retired United Church minister of West Sumnerland, who has many years as a representative of farmers' interests. He went to that district as a Congregational minister, later went into farming, and is still on the list of his church, the United Church of Canada. He also is a minister's son. Rev. Stanley Knowles, of Central United Church, is contesting Winnipeg Centre South in C.C.F. interests.

A MINISTERIAL PEDIGREE

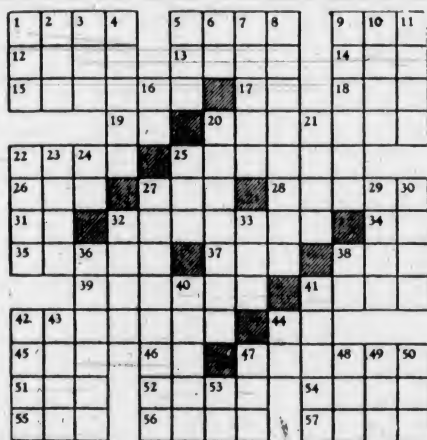

It was in Winnipeg that the present Federal candidate for Victoria grew up. King Gordon, who was professor of Christian Ethics for a period in Union College, Montreal, can claim ministerial pedigree through both father and mother. His father, Rev. Dr. C. W. Gordon (formerly Ralph Connor), was the son of a Presbyterian preacher in Glenora County, Ontario, noted for his Highland fire and commanding personality. His mother was daughter of Dr. J. M. King, principal of Manitoba College, a noted Presbyterian theologian. Then, too, at the head of Lake Superior, Rev. Daniel McVicar is running as Liberal candidate at Fort William.

Saskatchewan also has its quota of parson-politicians. Among these are four Federal C.C.F. candidates: M. Nicholson, Canon A. D. Stadel, Chauhanavon; H. Hamilton, Maymont; T. S. Douglas, Weyburn. The Social Credit landslide in Alberta swept four ministers of the Gospel into the legislative ranks. These are: Peter Dawson, Champion; Roy C. Taylor, Coleman; William Morrison, Blackie; and J. A. Wingblade, all but the last named United Churchmen. The Social Credit leader, although not regularly ordained, has been an evangelist for years, and is at present head of the Prophetic Bible Institute in Calgary.

B.C. LIKE MANITOBA

Coming over the Selkirk and the Rockies, we are on more familiar ground. British Columbia is like Manitoba in that over a considerable period Christian ministers have been to the front in party politics.

If September 8 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 12 noon to 2 p.m., from 4 to 6 p.m., and from 8 to 10 p.m. The danger periods are from 6 to 8 a.m., from 2 to 4 p.m., and from 10 p.m. until midnight.

Any attempt to upset or interfere with the regular routine of a home is likely to prove very poor judgment. It is advisable to try to adjust yourself to other people's plans this day, for opposition may cause resentment. Avoid acting arbitrarily in matters involving social activities, if you do not wish to jeopardize your popularity. Clean will be welcomed at friendly gatherings, but humor tarnished by a touch of vulgarity is likely to be rebuffed. If confronted by an embarrassing situation on this day, the plain, unvarnished truth may be used to greater advantage than a poorly attempted excuse. Self-possession is likely to be a desirable attribute, should you find yourself in a gathering of wisecracks expressing sentiments that may be at variance with your own. Married and engaged couples, and those engaged in affairs of the heart, will do well to remember "A soft answer turneth away wrath."

If a woman, and September 8 is your birthday, if you realize the importance of being sympathetic and make a point of saying whatever you have to say in a kindly manner, life probably will be with you most life probably will be with you most graciously. With you it may be that "the difficulty in life is the choice," so it might be wise to definitely make up your mind as to what you wish to do, then concentrate every effort to do it. Success will come to you—

"If thou with steady hand when tempests blow
Canst keep thy course right
And never cease to go."

Interior decorating, painting, sculpting, writing, singing, music, ac-

ing or teaching may be instrumental in helping you to arrive at your goal. Marriage might also help to solve many of your problems. The child born on September 8 generally, when it reaches school age, develops an excellent memory, and assimilates knowledge with remarkable ease. If a man, and September 8 is your natal day, you must have, and also be willing to give, an abundance of love to each the pinnacle of success. If you will be tolerant of the weaknesses of others, but severe where your own are concerned, your advancement probably will be rapid. Scientific research, educational or theological work, as well as geological, literary and political, are among the activities through which you may win both wealth and renown.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 9

"VIRGO"

If September 9 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9:15 to 11:15 a.m., from 1:15 to 3:15 p.m., and from 8:15 to 10:15 p.m. The danger periods are from 7:15 to 9:15 a.m., from 3:15 to 5:15 p.m., and from 10:15 until midnight.

The wise person will refrain, if possible, from complaining or finding fault without justification this day, for resentment can be easily aroused. To achieve successful results in business, perseverance combined with a lot of energy may be essential. This day might not be propitious for social activities, unless you are invited to participate as known to be free of business demands. It will be advisable not to be unreasonable, if a logical excuse is offered for refusing any invitation you see fit to extend. On matters of importance, refuse to be rushed into a hasty decision. It might pay to consider any important subject from several angles before expressing an opinion, especially if it is one which will be binding in any way. Married and engaged couples, and those building air castles in Cupid's domain, will show good judgment if they refrain from trying to impose their will on someone else. If a woman, and September 9 is your birthday, you have a great deal of self-control, even if you have a temper that can occasionally be highly explosive. You have the gift of being able to attract people and win their deep affection. You are probably very popular, especially with the opposite sex. As for women, you win their admiration as well as confidence. Artistic, you probably will be able to develop a talent for painting, playing some musical instrument, acting, singing, radio broadcasting or writing. You should make a wonderful wife.

The child born on September 9 generally, when it reaches school age, shows a decided partiality for a few selected subjects, in which it will do exceedingly well, to the possible detriment of a few in which it takes but little interest. The parents should not let this worry them, for on the whole they will have ample grounds for feeling proud of their offspring. If a man, and September 9 is your birthday, impulsive, generous, loyal and outspoken, you will have to guard carefully your tongue, so as not to make as many enemies as you do friends. The stage, legal or medical profession, literature and salesmanship are channels through which your versatility is likely to find the most suitable course.

H.M.S. Resolution Chapter H.M.S. Resolution Chapter will hold its first meeting of the season at the home of Miss Dorothy Crighton, 381 King George Terrace, on Tuesday at 8 p.m.

"Tact," said the lecturer, "is essential to good entertaining. I once dined at a house where the hostess had no tact. Opposite me was a model, quiet man. Suddenly he turned as red as a lobster on hearing his hostess say to her husband, How inattentive you are, Charlie! You must look after Mr. Brown better. He's helping himself to everything."

Report on Convention Presented

The Victoria United Church Presbyterial met at Metropolitan Church on Friday afternoon to hear the report of the Dominion Board of Missions given by Mrs. W. J. Graham, Presbyterial president, who, with Mrs. W. G. Wilson were delegates from British Columbia.

Mrs. Graham told of the great inspiration received from not only the general officers but from meeting the foreign and home missionaries who attended. The topic of the devotional period, which opened each session, "The World-Wide Fellowship of Christians," brought the members face to face with the great aim of the work, "The Kingdom of God Movement," throughout the world. From all over the Dominion came reports of the widespread interest in this movement.

CO-OPERATION NEEDED

It was also strongly urged that co-operation between W.M.S. and other organizations of the local church is needed. W.M.S. supply leadership when necessary. Tribute was paid to the movement's missionaries, among them, Miss Martin, who spent many years in Victoria; Miss Campbell, who had spent forty years in India, and Miss Archibald, who had forty-six years' service in Trinidad. They told of the great joy their years of service in the Master's work had been to them.

Mrs. W. G. Wilson, Provincial president, told of some of her impressions and paid warm tribute to Mrs. Graham for her faithful service and the part she took in the convention. Mrs. George Gray presided and led in the devotional period, taking as her subject, "Our Individual Responsibility." Mrs. W. H. Wilson sang "Bless the House" and "Shower Song." Mrs. W. G. Firth was the accompanist. Mrs. Chas. White.

Mrs. J. Nichol and family left for Vancouver on Friday after by trippers from the Continent.

ABC'S ARE HARD ON THE EYES

But They Needn't Be

Twenty out of every hundred school children have weakened eyesight. That's the toll that eyestrain takes! There's an added strain, too, when school opens, and more reason for being sure that your child does not suffer. Only an examination by a qualified specialist can reassure you and enable you to take corrective measures if they are needed.

Local Male Choir Opens New Season

The Victoria Male Choir, under the presidency of J. R. Cleaton and conductorship of Frank Tupman, inaugurated its 1935-36 season at a banquet in Spencer's dining-room recently.

Following the banquet, a very interesting programme was given. Among the contributing artists were Miss Dorothy Parsons, Miss Maquinn, Daniel Maurice Thomas, and Frank Tupman.

Toasts were proposed to the choir's host by Rev. William Allan, and to the Victoria Male Choir by W. Roberts, J. Jones replying to the latter.

Miss Maquinn, Daniels, the choir's pianist, acknowledged the toast proposed in her honor by P. Manning, by rendering a pianoforte selection.

A toast to the new members was proposed by L. H. O'Neill, Harry S. Hay responding. It was generally agreed that the excellent programme which exists in the choir is any criterion of the type of programmes that will be given this season, the musical public may anticipate many first-class performances by this group of sixty-five picked men.

The first regular rehearsal will be held in the Crystal Garden tomorrow evening at 7:45 o'clock.

Cathedral Women Make Plans for Winter Activities

The Christ Church Cathedral senior evening branch, Women's Auxiliary, held the opening meeting of the 1935-36 season on Thursday evening in the Guild room, Memorial Hall. The president, Miss M. R. Lawson, M.P.E., extended a welcome to the members and expressed her pleasure in introducing three new members.

A letter from Mrs. G. Barber, announcing her resignation as secretary, owing to leaving the city, was received with regret. Mrs. Barber has held this office for two and-a-half years and has done much faithful and competent work. A letter of appreciation from the members will be forwarded to her.

ANNUAL SALE

Plans for the winter work include the annual sale in November, and the making of an autograph quilt, a work which many of the members took their share. At the close of the business session, the Business Women's Branch joined with the Senior Branch to hear an inspiring address from Dean Quinlan.

Speaking of the Women's Auxiliary, he said it was formed for the sole purpose of spreading the Gospel. The home bases were all those countries that enjoyed the benefits of Christianity, the lines of advance were the missionaries in heathen lands. Yet with the civilized nations of the world living under the threat of possible conflict, with Italy centre of a great church and also centre of war, it was evident that the great need of the world was better Christians at the home base.

He reminded the members of the tremendous publicity of events in the world of today. The leaders and rulers of non-Christian races can do and know and pronounce judgment on the actions of the civilized world in a manner unimagined a few years back. But how do the Perfuming was considered an art in bygone times. Today it has become an industry. Its first patrons were goddesses. And, in a way, its patrons today still are goddesses. For a goddess is, figuratively, a woman perfect in every detail. And no woman can expect to seem goddess-like, to enthrall men with her charms, unless these charms are enhanced by the presence of some delicate, pleasing fragrance.

Most perfume experts claim that perfumes should be individual, should harmonize with one's personality. Yet, unfortunately, they seldom give a woman much idea of how to select her own individual fragrance. Of course, women do not fall into neat little classes, and it would therefore be impossible for any one to designate the correct perfume for each woman. There are, however, several rough rules that one well-known perfume designer has laid down for the selection of floral perfumes. And they're really quite helpful.

MERE SUGGESTIONS

The rules to which I refer are merely suggestions that may help to guide women in their selections, and that should be amended to suit the individual. Lily of the valley, for instance, breathes youthfulness and buoyancy of spirit, and is generally suggested for young brunettes. The elusive and delicate scent of jasmine adds depth to the personality of the woman and the brown-eyed blonde.

Musician Revisits Victoria Return to City for Short Stay

MISS ADELE BUCKLIN

After nearly a year's absence in New Zealand with their parents, Hon. G. A. Bucklin, consul-general at Wellington, and Mrs. Bucklin, the Misses Mary and Adele Bucklin are once again in Victoria for a short time, before proceeding to England to continue their musical studies in London.

Very well-known and popular both in the local musical world and among the younger social set, these gifted young musicians have had most interesting and valuable experience in concertizing since they went to the Antipodes. Shortly after reaching New Zealand, they made a happy musical contact in meeting a brilliant young pianist of Christ Church, Frederick Page, who also is now on his way to England via the Panama route, to study under a special grant created by New Zealand University. While all three will take up intensive study of their respective instruments, they hope to continue their trio work in London, the combination having proved so happy in New Zealand.

VALUABLE EXPERIENCE. "We are very glad that we have had this experience in concert work in New Zealand. It has been most valuable," Miss Bucklin said yesterday, on her arrival on the R.M.S. Niagara.

The Misses Bucklin are to appear in concert here on Wednesday, September 18, assisted by Rudolph Hokanson, the brilliant young Seattle pianist. Almost immediately they will start for Toronto, to join their sister, Mrs. Bassingthwaite, with whom they expect to motor to Florida—to say goodbye to their grandmother before returning to Montreal to sail from there on October 5 for England. They expect to remain at least a year in London before rejoining their parents in New Zealand.

The girls of the club, under the direction of Mrs. C. Douglas, had the reception room beautifully decorated for the occasion, with late summer blooms and streamers in the club's colors, green and white. The gifts were concealed under a large badminton bird. Miss Senor Walker, in honor of Miss Woods, sang two delightful numbers, accompanied by Miss L. Walker and Mrs. F. Goodwin. Games and contests were enjoyed.

Supper was served from a beautifully arranged table with a centerpiece made by Miss L. Walker, with a crystal bowl of sweet peas and roses surrounded by white dahlias, and green holders with white lilies. Mrs. J. Mosher, Mrs. Austin Gale, Mrs. T. B. Oxley and Mrs. C. H. Sivan presided at the urns. Miss Woods thanked the hostess and members of the club for the many beautiful gifts and kind wishes. Among the guests were Miss M. Trapp, who left yesterday for England. In her honor, Miss Elenor Walker sang "Just a Wearying for You." The happy evening closed with the singing of "They Are Jolly Good Fellows."

Singer Is at Her Best in Brilliant Romantic Story

Many reasons have been given by persons who went to the theatre two and three times to see Grace Moore in "One Night of Love." Most of them said they had gone because of Miss Moore's beautiful singing. Others said the picture as a whole was grand entertainment. Still others said a picture as grand as "One Night of Love" couldn't be made again, and that they might as well enjoy the film while they had access to it.

But now that Grace Moore's new picture, "Love Me Forever," a Columbia film, now showing at the Capitol Theatre, has been released all over the country, people are making the same statements again. According to all reports, "Love Me Forever" is far surpassing "One Night of Love" in every respect.

The story deals with a wealthy cafe owner and gambler, an ardent lover of fine music, who makes Grace Moore, a singer in his cafe, his protegee. He sacrifices wealth and position to satisfy an ideal, to make of his beautiful singer the greatest soprano in the world, to give her the fame she deserves.

Grace Moore, as the cafe singer who eventually finds success and happiness, brings to the screen a vivid, colorful, and personable. It is this experienced artistry that has endeared her to audiences the world over.

Leo Carrillo featured with Miss Moore, plays the fiery gambler. His is the leading male role. Luis Albern, who was also featured in "One Night of Love," plays a comedy role, that of an excitable little Italian.

Doubly of interest, the production also marks the return of John Gilbert to the screen and his reunion with Garbo after a picture separation of five years.

Garbo had the story of "Queen Christina" in mind for several years and explored deeply in Stockholm archives during her recent visit to Sweden to study the character she was called upon to play.

Queen Christina has been described as a seventeenth century woman who lived a twentieth century life. On the throne she was a spectacular figure. She defied the finery of feminism for the more manly garb of her military rank and harbored her palace advisers through her unconventional intrigues.

It is during an incognito journey that she meets a handsome Spanish envoy, portrayed by Gilbert, and permits herself to fall madly in love with him. When he finally reaches the royal court to seek diplomatic favor, he is amazed to see the girl he had met sitting on the throne. Christina was a woman who might have lived today, so modern were her views and modes of living. She remained with the company for ten years.

Althouse also appeared with the opera companies in Chicago, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Philadelphia, Boston and Washington, as well as in Germany. His concert career has taken him throughout all of the United States season after season, as well as to Canada, Mexico, Australia, New Zealand and Europe.

Paul Althouse will sing here on October 1 at the Empire Theatre, under the local management of Violet Wilson.

The City Chess Club sent a team to New Westminster, yesterday afternoon to play a match with the New Westminster Chess Club. Eight players made the trip, having been picked from a strong membership of expert players.

The club has an unbroken record of victories on Vancouver Island, and as this is the first time that a team has been sent to the Mainland, the club is hoping to add another victory to its list.

It is hoped that while the team is on the Mainland other matches can be arranged with Vancouver clubs.

From Comedy at Dominion

A Scene From "Every Night at Eight," the Feature Attraction, Starring George Raft, at the Dominion Theatre.

Fast-Paced Musical Revue Featured at the Dominion

Film producers having lured many celebrities from the radio world, are now launching a counter-attack with an offer in the form of a five-year singing contract to three motion-picture actresses, producing them in a musical revue. The three actresses are: Alice Faye, Frances Langford and Patsy Kelly, principals appearing opposite George Raft in "Walter Pidgeon's Musical Comedy Drama, "Every Night at Eight," now at the Dominion Theatre, received the radio proposal from Raymond Paige, Western musical director of the Columbia Broadcasting Company. Paige became enthusiastic about the singing of the three girls after witnessing a pre-preview of "Every Night at Eight," in which they appear as a sister singing trio.

"Every Night at Eight" is a gay, romantic comedy with music depicting the rise of three girls as workers in a mint julep factory to world-wide renown as radio stars.

An amateur radio hour, the first time to appear in a feature picture, is one of comedy highlights of the film. Walter Catlett and the Radio Rogues are in the supporting cast.

Some of the hit tunes include "I'm in the Mood for Love," "Then You'll Never Be Blue," "Take It Easy," "Speaking Confidentially,"

POOL AND LEVY POWERS STAYED

Dominion Marketing Board To Investigate Vancouver Milk Problems Soon

Distribution of all milk in the Vancouver milkshed through one spout, for twenty-five years the dream of dairy groups in the Fraser Valley, appeared as vague and illusory yesterday as at any period in the last two and one-half decades. British Columbia requests seeking levying and pooling rights for the Lower Mainland Dairy Products Board received a formal but non-committal reply from Ottawa.

A. Leitch, chairman of the Dominion Marketing Board, in answer to Hon. K. C. Macdonald, who took up the issue for the milk control board, stated that representatives of the Dominion body would visit Vancouver in the week of September 16, to make a personal examination of the situation in the Fraser Valley.

Meanwhile there has been no sign of restoration of the right of the Lower Mainland Dairy Products Board to create a milk pool through a central agency or to impose levies, as tried in 1931 in an equalization scheme under other legislation then existing.

In this case authority rests with the Dominion Marketing Board. That body recently expressly withdrew pooling and levying powers from the Lower Mainland milk control body. Until the Dominion Board has made an investigation on the ground, no further action is expected in the issue.

Without pooling and equalization levies, no central agency scheme can successfully operate, the Province contends.

LIVESTOCK ENTRIES AT FAIR GAIN

More Than 1,000 Head of Cattle, Horses and Sheep Housed at Willows

POULTRY-BUILDING WILL BE CROWDED

More than 1,000 head of livestock will be housed in the Willows this week, indicating the widespread interest that is being taken in this section of the show. Entries have been received from all parts of Canada and the Pacific Coast states, and many Prairie farms have sent cattle and sheep to the Fair in carload lots.

MANY SHEEP
The sheep entries, particularly, are much heavier than last year, while there is a slight increase in the number of cattle. However, among the heavy horses the highest increase is reported, and this should assure some fine competitions and events for the horse show.

The poultry building will house, at the very least, 1,200 birds, while rabbits, geese, and other livestock also report gains or entries equivalent to those of last year.

Among those sending cattle here from far distant points is J. J. Richards, of Red Deer, who is sending one carload of Ayshire cattle, while the Canadian Pacific Supply Farm at Strathmore, Alberta, will send three carloads of livestock made up as follows: One car of cattle, one of horses and a third of sheep.

SENDING CLYDESDALES
James M. Munro, a well-known exhibitor here, also will send a carload of heavy horses, Clydesdales, to the fair from his Carleton Place, Ontario, ranch, and in addition will send a six-horse team for the horse show events.

H. Whiting, of Westwood, B.C., also is sending a carload of livestock. His entries are confined to sheep. Another carload of sheep will come from R. B. Hunter's farm at Wellington, B.C., while still another carload of sheep will be sent by A. Richards, of Sarnia, Saskatchewan.

Reese B. Brown, of Brown Town, Washington, will send a carload of Herefords to the fair. Another United States exhibitor, Mr. J. H. Sand Spring Farm, of Idaho, which will send a carload of Guernseys.

Red Sox Going into the Ninth
The Red Sox, going into the ninth inning of the opener with the score 5-1 against them, managed to rush two runs across the plate and keep the bases full with no outs.
Manager Joe Cronin then smashed a liner to Third Baseman Hale, who couldn't hold the ball, but deflected it toward Shortstop Knickerbocker. Knickerbocker caught it before it touched the ground, tossed it to Second Baseman Hughes, who stepped on the bag before Weller could return. Hughes then relayed the ball to First Baseman Trosky before Alameda could get back.
The three box players started to run as soon as they saw Hale juggle the ball.

R. R. Taylor defeated F. L. Leslie, 4 strokes.

CANADIANS DRAWN
When the field troops hopefully away from the first tie to inaugurate the title hunt, "Sandy" Ross, Sonerville, Canada's old campaigner and many times champion, will have Herman Hellman, of Los Angeles, as his first-round opponent.

The draw was announced late tonight.
Joe Thompson, registered from Ancaster, Ont., will oppose Sidney Coltart, of Morristown, Pa., while Bud Donovan, of Winnipeg, will enjoy a day of inaction. The Manitoban drew a first-round bye.

If form prevails the Canadian bidders should prevail through the opening sortie. All of them have had more experience in national tournament play than their opponents. None of the Americans who will be testing the opening fire of the Canucks is of first rank prominence.

Another draw was released yesterday for play in the first round of the Dillabough Skuld competition at the Uplands Golf Club, which is played in conjunction with the Buchanan Cup in the seniors' tournament. Play must be completed by September 15, and conditions are match play without handicaps.

At present there are six tied with scores of 88 in the qualifying round and a play-off is necessary to decide the last four places. The play-off is set for next Wednesday at 8 o'clock.
The draw follows:
Capt. W. E. Tapley vs. R. R. Taylor.
Rev. E. F. Church vs. first play-off.
Thomas H. Horne vs. second play-off.
J. H. Regan vs. J. A. Cameron.
A. Woodcroft vs. F. H. A. Norton.
C. A. Thompson vs. third play-off.
J. C. Pendray vs. fourth play-off.
A. Youngman vs. G. R. Naden.

Spencer's soccer squad will hold a workout this morning at Victoria West Park at 9:30 o'clock. All players are asked to turn out.

Victoria XI Defeats Cowichan Cricketers In League Encounter

Victory Gives Local Club Victoria and District Association Championship—Goward Bowls Well—Incogs and Cs Take Fixtures

Defeating visiting Cowichan cricketers by nine wickets and 24 runs yesterday afternoon at Macdonald Park, Victoria Cricketers Club captured the Victoria and District Cricket Association championship. Bais captured the Victoria and District Cricket Association championship. Bais captured the Victoria and District Cricket Association championship. Bais captured the Victoria and District Cricket Association championship.

Two friendly matches were played and resulted in wins for the University School Incogs and the Five Cs. The Incogs defeated Victoria's second eleven, 95 to 44, at Mount Tplmie, and the churchmen came through to victory over the Albions at Beacon Hill Park. The scores were: Five Cs, 198 for seven wickets (declared); Albions, 129.

GOWARD BOWLS WELL
A sparkling bowling display by the veteran all-round cricketer, H. A. "Giddy" Goward, who disposed of seven Cowichan batsmen for the small total of 23 runs, was the highlight of the Victoria Club victory at Macdonald Park. Goward, turning in one of his best performances of the season, was practically unplayable.

Cowichan opened at bat and made a good first wicket stand with Bais and F. Considine scoring 20 and 36 runs, respectively. However, after they were dismissed, Cowichan wickets fell rapidly, and except for Leighton, who retired, the Up-Islanders could not touch the Victoria bowling.

STRONG COMBINATION
Kinch and Darcus comprised the Victoria Club's first wicket. Darcus was out when he hit his own wicket after scoring 5 runs. Terry Peers joined Kinch and this combination soon passed the Cowichan total. Victoria was still batting when completed 103 runs for the loss of one wicket. Kinch scored 37 and Peers 51 runs.

HUDDERSFIELD TOWN LEADERS IN ENGLISH SOCCER

Defeats Brentford In Close Match to Take Top Position

Registers 2-1 Victory While Rest of Leaders Are Beaten—Manchester City and Stoke City Lose—Arsenal in Draw—Scottish Favorites Score Triumphs

LONDON, Sept. 7. — Leaders in English League First Division football all lost their games today and as a result Huddersfield Town sprang into first place with a fine victory over Brentford, 2-1, on the Brent ground.

Manchester City and Stoke City, who with Brentford had won in their previous starts, were beaten at Sunderland and West Bromwich. In each case the score was 2-1 in the home team's favor. Arsenal could only draw with Birmingham, 1-1. Sheffield Wednesday and Wolverhampton Wanderers, two other high placed teams, played to a scoreless draw on the Wednesday's ground. In a startling comeback, Derby County walloped Bolton Wanderers, 4-0, before a home crowd, while playing at Preston, Middlebrough performed in great style to win 4-0. In a local derby, Liverpool delighted its supporters by defeating Everton 6-0.

Tottenham Hotspur lost ground in the Second Division when they lost 2-1 to Newcastle United at White Hart Lane. The United is now in a tie for first place with Blackpool and Southampton, both of whom played draw games. Southern League leaders, Southampton, jumped into the lead in the Southern Section of the Third Division along with Bournemouth, while Clapton was losing 2-0 to Notts County. Southampton, at home, defeated Northampton 4-0.

Stockport County drew into a clear lead in the Northern Section by defeating Barrow 2-1.

SCOTTISH LEAGUE
GLASGOW, Sept. 7. — Five wins by Rangers, Aberdeen, Celtic and Hamilton Academicals sent the crack First Division Scottish clubs at the top of the league today.

There were few surprises as the soccer clubs settled down for the second month of the season. The Rangers-Airdrieonians tilt at Ibrox Park was a high scoring affair, with the champions finally winning 5-3. The second place Aberdeen overcame Ayr United 3-0. Celtic at Dumfries defeated Queen of the South 3-1 and the Accies made it 5-1 against Partick Thistle at Hamilton.

Dunfermline kept in the running by a 2-1 success at Kilmarnock and Motherwell won at Clyde 2-1. Arbroath played a valiant game at Edinburgh, but lost to Hearts 2-0. Queen's Park provided the titbit of the day by trouncing Hibernians 6-0 at Hampden Park.

Leading teams lost their first matches in Second Division play. Rejuvenated Edinburgh City defeated St. Mirren 3-2. Dundee United had a 3-1 victory over Falkirk and Morton lost 2-1 to East Stirling. In these games the points went to the home teams.

SARNIA WHIPS MAINLANDERS IN GRID GAME

Touring Imperials Chalk Up Easy Victory Over Meras-lomas by 19 to 2

nada's national champions, Sarnia Imperials, today battled to their second consecutive triumph in their Western tour when they humbled Vancouver Meras-lomas, Western Canada champions, 19-2, in an exhibition contest.

Clicking in all departments except through the air, Sarnia powered their way through the line, whipping around the ends and outpunting the orange and black Coast Striders.

Norm Perry, Sarnia's husky right-half, punched the ball across the Vancouver line for the first score of the game in the first quarter after the visitors had powered their way down the field through a surprised and helpless Coast defense. The try for the extra point failed and the quarter ended with Sarnia leading, 5-0.

An exchange of kicks put the ball on the Meras-lomas seventeen-yard line and three backs sent Hayes across for the second Imperial touchdown, also unconverted.

ROSS SCORES POINT

A bad snap gave Meras-lomas possession of the Imperials' ten-yard line and Joe Ross booted to the deadline for one point after two line plunges failed to gain ground.

At the end of the first half scoring with Sarnia leading, 10-1.

Sweeping end runs sent Meras-lomas to the Sarnia three-yard line, but when two line smashes failed, Ross attempted a drop kick which went wide, hitting the end-out-of-bounds area for another deadline point.

Perry grabbed a forward pass on the Meras-lomas fifteen-yard line for another Imperial touchdown before the quarter ended.

Rocky Parascia drop-kicked Sarnia's last three points in the final quarter after the Sarnia ended another Ross' kick in Meras-lomas territory.

Bandman P. Drysdale, sixteen Canadian Scottish sharpshooter, finished in second place with a score of 91, two points lower than the leader. Captain W. E. Tapley, who led the field last week, was bracketed in third place with G.M.S.W. B. McKay, with a score of 90.

Exhibition Will Continue All Week

First Exhibition Only Day Long; 1935 Fair to Last for Entire Week

Progress of Agricultural Exhibition Outstanding—Initial Presentation Held in One Building—Here on October 2, 1861—But 100 Persons Present, Records Show—Features Reviewed

HAVE any present-day readers of The Colonist perused the early files of The British Colonist? These records contain a wealth of material which throws interesting sidelights on the struggles of the early pioneers. In those days life was packed with excitement but it was not all play, particularly for such settlers as were making a living from the soil which they tilled.

Perhaps some of the present-day readers would be interested in hearing about the growth of fairs in Victoria—a story which is unfolded as one follows through the age-yellow pages of The Colonist from year to year. A commencement might be made with the first Agricultural Exhibition which was held at Victoria on October 2, 1861, and consequently was the first exhibition of its kind to be held west of the Rockies.

MODEST BEGINNING

The modest beginnings, yet the unbounded faith and vision of its founders, are a striking illustration of the progress of Victoria during the past seventy-four years. What was but a day's exhibition then, now covers a week; what could be housed in one building then now takes several, and whereas scarcely one hundred people attended the first fair, a single day's registration more than passes the thousand mark today. All of which shows the remarkable advance which has been made since 1861, and fully justifies the faith of the directors of the first fair.

It was a matter of faith on their part. The colony was in its childhood stage and was not yet on its feet. Numbering but a few hundred souls, it was not self-sustaining. Most of the foodstuffs as well as other supplies were imported from Oregon and the neighboring states. Some despaired of agriculture in the colony, saying that the country was in no way suited for it. But most people, while admitting its primitive agricultural advantages, paid little heed to its development and sought for produce at the nearest market.

The situation is tersely summed up in the following editorial comment of the day:

FARMING LANGUISHES

"There is no denying the fact that agriculture is not in such an advanced condition as it ought to be considering our fertile soil and climate. In reality agriculture languishes."

Announces Civic Holiday

MAYOR DAVID LEEMING

Gratified with the wonderful showing that fair officials have made in the past, and enthusiastic over the Exhibition's future, by virtue of the tremendous increase in entries and attendance figures, the Mayor has declared next Wednesday afternoon as a public holiday, so that all offices, stores and schools will be closed, thus enabling the general public to visit the fair and make it the biggest day of the week.

Four Districts to Exhibit at Willows For Tolmie Trophy

Victoria, Langley, Burnaby and Coquitlam Are Entered—Local Exhibit Strong Favorite After Winning at Vancouver for Second Time

ANOTHER fine exhibition of district displays is assured the Fair this week in the Main Building, where 1,500 square feet of space have been set aside for the four entries, which includes that of the Victoria Horticultural Society, which again this year has won the "Horn of Plenty" trophy at the Vancouver Exhibition.

Nearly $1,000 in prizes will be awarded the winner receiving $300 and the J. W. Tolmie Trophy. In addition to Victoria, Burnaby, Langley and Coquitlam will be represented. Last year the local exhibit, arranged by John Naysmith, took first prize at both the Victoria and Vancouver fairs.

FOURTH VICTORY
The victory marked the fourth time since 1911, when it was inaugurated, the city has won the competition. Previously Victoria had been successful in 1929 and in 1931 and 1932.

Of a possible total of 1,946 points, 300 are given for arrangement, 100 for poultry produce, 100 for dairy produce, 250 for fresh fruits, 276 for garden vegetables, 200 for preserved fruits and vegetables, 240 for field roots and tubers, 200 for forage plants and 280 for grain and seeds.

DISPLAY SPACE
All exhibits must be produced in the district exhibiting and the same space will be allotted to each, the dimensions being thirty feet by twelve feet deep wall space.

Color harmony, balance and general attractiveness will be determining features of the arrangement, with the first mentioned being most important.

Details of the other sections which go to make up the exhibit are fully explained in the official price list available at the Provincial Exhibition office at the Willows. Quite one of the most attractive, and ranking second in importance to none of the exhibits in the Agricultural Building, the district displays again promise to provide one of the features of the Exhibition.

Pat was one day employed by an old lady in the country. At tea time, when the old lady was serving the tea, she laid a small morsel of honey on the plate.

"Bogorra, ma'am," said Pat, "I see you keep a bee."

Fair Entries Shatter Former Records

Many Judges to Adjudicate for Willows Fair

Competent Men Secured From All Parts of the Province to Inspect More Than 1,500 Entries Received for Annual Exhibition—Exhibits Divided Into Sixteen Departments

WITH more than 15,000 entries listed at the Willows, it is necessary to have a large staff of competent judges to adjudicate on the many exhibits, both livestock, produce, women's work, art work and other displays. Consequently, long before the Fair opens, the management secures the services of the most competent to judge at a fair of the magnitude such as is held in Victoria.

In order to detail out the work, the show has been divided into sixteen separate departments, which in turn are divided into various divisions.

MANY JUDGES

Dr. W. Sparrow, Stevenson, will judge the light horses, while W. Gerrie will officiate as judge of the heavy horses. The cattle section is divided into seven classes, with A. D. Paterson, Ladner, as judge of the beef cattle; H. L. Steve, Stevenson, as Holstein judge; O. C. Evans, Port Haney, Jersey judge; J. S. Fye, Stevenson, Avonshire judge; Charles Hawthorne, Chilliwack, Guernsey judge; Mr. Stewart, Victoria, and Mr. George, Kamloops, boys' and girls' clubs, and G. H. Thornberry, Victoria, R.O.P. and cow testing judge.

Sheep exhibits will be reviewed by W. H. Hicks, Agassiz, S. G. Freeman, of Calgary, will journey to this city to officiate as judge of all goats entered in the exhibition. William Walker, New Westminster, and Charles Good, Vancouver, will be on hand to award points to the winners in the poultry section.

William Hagar, Victoria, and C. Woolley, Victoria, will be judges of pigs and rabbits, respectively. C. Tice and W. R. Foster, both of this city, will judge the field crops on display, and W. White, G. E. W. Clarke and W. H. Robertson, all of Victoria, will handle the fruit and vegetable exhibits. George Robinson, Elk Lake, veteran flower judge, will award the prizes in the floral classes.

LOCAL OFFICIALS
Dairy products will be judged by H. S. Batey, Victoria, and honey exhibits will be reviewed by A. W.

Were Judges in Recent Competition

H. U. Knight, of Knight's Studios; Heister Wilkinson, Portrait Photographer, and A. V. Pollard, Associated Screen News, Ltd., who gave their services as judges of The Daily Colonist Amateur Snapshot Competition each month during the Summer. Their selections from the hundreds of snaps submitted each month have won the approval of all and their co-operation has been heartily appreciated by the officials.

TO DISPLAY TELEVISION

Hall of Science Physics Department Will Conduct Unique Experiments

Physics, comprising electricity and mechanics, to be displayed and demonstrated in the Hall of Science at the Fair, will be in charge of Angus Tregidga, M.A., B.Sc., and student proceeding this year with a scholarship to the California Institute of Technology.

A large Tesla coil capable of generating 500,000 volts will be in working order and interesting experiments will be made with high frequency current.

One of the more recent developments in radio is the development of the oscilloscope. By means of this instrument a person will, by speaking into a microphone, see his voice waves. It is hoped to have in the exhibit a miniature model of the traffic signals at present used in Victoria showing how they work.

An interesting instrument made by the Kendall Radio Laboratories is a television scanning device, which shows the recent developments in television and by means of which a picture at the back is reproduced through a revolving disk with holes. These and many elementary experiments with magnetism and electricity will be seen in the Hall of Science.

W. H. MEARNS

WHO is secretary of the B.C. Agricultural Association, carries the responsibility of seeing that everything is done to make the annual exhibition a success. To the public, the fair is a one-week engagement. To the secretary it is a whole-year job, in which contacting exhibitors, keeping the grounds in proper repair, preparing prize lists, selling display space and generally organizing the fair are only a few of his many tasks.

Entrance to Fair Ground Brightened

Neon Signs to Greet Patrons at Night—Many Repairs Carried Out

EXTENSIVE WORK ON BUILDINGS COMPLETED

When patrons of the Provincial Exhibition this year approach the entrance gates at night, they will be greeted with a blaze of light improvements to the entrance of the fair grounds have been carried out under the direction of W. H. Mearns, secretary of the B.C. Agricultural Association.

The main gateway, through which both pedestrians and automobiles pass, will be illuminated by large Neon signs, advertising the fair as the "Provincial Exhibition."

The task of preparing the various buildings at the Willows for the seven-day fair has been completed. Workmen have been busily engaged in repairing, shingling, and painting while many new improvements have been made to the grounds.

ROCKS REMOVED
All rocks have been moved from the race track, which is now in a better condition than it ever has been, while the big oval has been completely drained, and is being prepared as a suitable field for polo and other sports.

The poultry and goat buildings have been resingled and men have shingled the cattle and sheep barn. Number one to six horse barns also have been resingled. In recent years, the Main Building, Manufacturers' Building and Women's Building were resingled, so that the exhibition plant has been whittled into an excellent state of repair.

NEW FLOWER BEDS
Last Fall many young trees were planted about the grounds, and these have come along well, while the trees planted previously have shown a remarkable growth, enhancing the general attractiveness of the exhibition grounds. New flower beds have been laid out, while a long flower border and rockery have been laid out along one of the roads leading to the Horse Show Building.

An open area, looking onto the cattle and sheep barns, which heretofore was nothing but parched grass in the Summer, has been converted into a beautiful flower bed. The greens have been kept well watered, so that everything now appears quite fresh.

The various roads through the grounds were patched in spots, and other general reconditioning work has been carried out.

The Prohibitionists are making headway in B.C., and we hear. The historic struggle will not be between St. George and the dragon.

Coolerator

See It at the Fair

Outwardly the "Coolerator" has all the beauty of finish and symmetry of design characteristic of the expensive electric refrigerator. Inwardly it is vastly different to any ice or electric refrigerator you have ever seen. The "Coolerator" eliminates all food odors, as they are picked up by a continuous flow of air and passed through an air conditioning chamber, where they are completely absorbed and washed away.

What a difference it makes in the condition of the food. No drying out. No mingling of flavors. No covered dishes required and everything remains—in its natural, fresh, juicy state. Because of the patented construction of the ice tray the ice melts more slowly and is far more economical than ice refrigerators of the ordinary type. See the "Coolerator" at the Fair. Every housewife will see its advantages at once.

Prize Babbacombe Bull

on this Southern section of Vancouver Island and parts of the Lower Mainland.

Among the outstanding exhibits will be the district displays. These contain the pick of everything from the various districts represented and never fail to draw considerable comment from the public on account of the excellent quality of the individual items shown.

There will be at least four and possibly five districts competing this year for the J. W. Toimie Trophy, and the other districts will try hard to wrest the prize from J. W. Toimie, who won it last year for Victoria district.

LARGE ENTRY LIST

In vegetables there will be a very large entry list, and several new growers have signified their intention to show this year for the first time. The vegetable displays, both individual and collections, are always most interesting, and among them will be displayed some of the finest produce that can be grown anywhere.

The fruit display will be very fine too, and the entry list will be very well filled. On account of the late date of the Fair, the Fall fruits should be in grand condition for showing, and this section will undoubtedly be one of the most attractive in the building.

FLORAL DISPLAYS

The floral displays will, of course, be the principle feature in the Main Building and will provide a riot of color during the whole time of the Fair. Entries tax the available space, and these contain a number of new exhibitors who have not previously shown at the Fair.

In the larger displays will be that of Broome's Victoria Nurseries, Ltd., comprising a complete floricultural exhibit, which will include some of their grand dahlias, as well as many other varieties of cut flowers, ferns, and potted plants. Among their dahlias, which they feature, will be some of the newest varieties, including Sonny Boy, Golden Goblin, Washington Giant and King of the Autumn in the large decorative type, and in the smaller type they will have many of the Champs, including Glorious, Scarlet Conco, Lady Mary Hope and many others. The Pompons will also be in evidence in many shades, and will help complete a display which no doubt will be one of the most attractive to be seen.

Lakeview Aquatic Gardens will have a most interesting display of aquatic plants, including some grand water lilies, floating hearts, pitcher plants, bog plants and native ferns. They include also such outstanding varieties as Escarboucle, Aurora, Gratiella, Rose Arey and Conqueror. This will be a new feature at the Fair and a most attractive.

live one. They also hope to show a dwarf yellow which only grows a few inches high and was found by Mr. Lohbrunner growing at an elevation of some 8,000 feet in the mountains near Lytton.

NEW DISPLAY

A new flower to be displayed in quantity this year will be the fuchsia, and J. D. Hallam, of Sidney, will show a number of the newer varieties of this most attractive plant. He has some of the very latest varieties, many of which have not been seen here before, and his exhibit will be a valuable addition to the floral section.

Dahlias will also be shown by G. T. Saunders, of Hillbank. He has about 400 varieties of this most attractive flower and will probably be able to show a great many of them this year. Mr. Saunders has not shown here before and his entry will make a welcome addition to the ranks of exhibitors. R. O. Lamb will show the latest in Begonias, in which he specializes, and will also display several other varieties of plants and cut flowers. His tuberous begonias are in wonderful bloom at present and will make a most attractive addition to the show.

Gladioli will be well represented by Island enthusiasts, including R. M. Palmer, of Cobble Hill. This will include a number of varieties originated by himself and also many of the best from other growers in Canada and other countries.

GLADIOLI EXHIBIT

Messrs. Arrowsmith & Son, G. F. Wardle and C. S. McTavish, all of Sidney district, will be on hand with fine displays of this popular flower, and from present indications their blooms will be better than they have been for several years past. The exhibits will include many varieties of the large and also smaller-flowered types and some very fine seedlings are promised for the exhibition. Elder's Capitol Dahlias Garden, of Mount Toimie, will show a large entry of dahlias, which will include that glorious new Pink Daily Mail, which was one of the outstanding English varieties in 1934. Mr. Elder's Lady Moya Ponsonby is still one of the unbeaten varieties at the flower shows of Canada and the United States and will be shown in quantity. Another variety of his own origination is a lovely decorative type in cream flushed with pink.

HEADQUARTERS FOR HORSE SHOW EVENTS

Three Horse Show programmes will be held in the above building at the Willows Fair Grounds, while the public may view the horses in their stalls throughout the day.

which he has named Mrs. Duncan, McTavish. This seedling was grown in England last season and has been reported as a new color combination. Another new decorative will be Alice Howe, which is a golden orange and came from far off Australia. In addition to the large-type dahlias, Mr. Elder will complete his display with a fine showing of the Champs, and Pompons, many of which have been imported from England and will be shown here for the first time.

Layritz Nurseries, Ltd., will feature a display of roses, evergreens and shrubs. Their display is always greatly admired and causes considerable comments on its generally excellent quality and attractiveness. Rockholme Gardens, Ltd., will show some of their better rock plants, both native and imported, as well as shrubs and a number of seasonal flowers. Their stock is in fine show condition and will be very much admired.

Fred Wiper will be on hand with his collection of native and British ferns and will occupy a prominent ground space in the centre of the building. His collection of ferns is one of the finest in this part of the continent and never fails to attract a great many interested admirers. The honey section promises to be completely new this year, and the management will be hard pressed to supply the space required to show this interesting display to advantage.

NEW ORLEANS.—The pigeon killed recently by a pop fly from the bat of Eddie Rose, New Orleans, outfielder, during a game with Birmingham has been stuffed as a souvenir of the freak event.

Highland Contests To Be Held During Week of Exhibition

Three New Trophies Offered for Competition—Additional Classes Announced—Entrants From Mainland and U.S. Coming

THE skill of pipes and the merry dances of Scotland will be featured on Wednesday at the Provincial Exhibition at the Willows Fair Grounds, when the third annual Highland Dancing and Piping Competition is staged. Entry forms for the competition have been distributed and many answers have been filed with the Exhibition office from Mainland and Interior points as well as United States centers.

Three new trophies have been added to the list this year, and several new events, owing to the necessity of widening the scope due to the large number of entries.

The new trophies are the John bia, will be in charge of this section. They are specializing in chemistry and engineering, and are quite competent to handle the responsibilities of such a department of the Hall of Science.

The exhibit comprises an interesting array of chemical apparatus and equipment loaned by McGill and Orme. Some of the experiments, which are very spectacular, consist in analyzing vinegar for acidity, in household ammonia for ammonia, and others.

A most outstanding experiment is that which is done with Luminol, a chemical which was just discovered last January, and recently put on the market by the Eastman Kodak Company. It is the strongest known source of chemical light and developes no heat. In this way it is perfectly efficient. It is strong enough to take a photograph in a perfectly dark room with no electricity or combustion.

The spectrum of various gases will be observed through the spectroscopic which will be on demonstration. A spectacular illumination mixture used in the manufacture of chromium rises to the temperature of 3000 degrees F. in half a second, and results in a blinding flash of light. The crystal front is a very beautiful illustration of crystal formation. One or two drops are put into a solution of waterglass and immediately starts to grow like a sub-marine forest. These and many other experiments in chemistry will be of interest to the general public.

Nearly Two Miles Of Displays to Be Seen at Exhibition

All Space Sold Out and Many Turned Away When Exhibition Space Is Sought—Animated Displays and Demonstrations Feature Show

WITH every square foot of exhibition space sold out, there will be more than two miles of commercial and industrial exhibits for visitors to see at the Willows this year, officials of the B.C. Agricultural Association state. The demand for space this year has been at a premium, and up to a few days before the opening exhibitors had to be turned down. A fifty-foot frontage was sought by one big firm, but there was no space available.

Many of the exhibitors are installing animated displays this year, while there will be many demonstrations, samples and other favors given away.

THE EXHIBITORS
Following is a complete list of the exhibitors:

Victoria Women's Institute, Daughters of England, Dominion Government, Esquimalt Subdivision Catholic League, Jubilee Hospital Women's Auxiliary, Singer Sewing Machine, A. HIDDEN TRIANGLES INTRIGUING GAME

Y.W.C.A. to Conduct Fascinating Contest at Well-Arranged Booth at Fair

The contest of hidden triangles will be found at the Y.W.C.A. booth at the Provincial Exhibition. An attractive booth, suggesting by posters the varied interests of the Y.W.C.A., is being arranged by the girls' work committee, consisting of Mrs. R. Peiton, Mrs. Alex Stewart, Mrs. W. M. Walker, Mrs. W. J. Fletcher, Mrs. D. B. Keir, Mrs. P. A. Gibbs, Mrs. T. Hammond. A number of business girls are assisting with the decorations and the distribution of programme folders.

The mystery consists of triangles within triangles, so intriguing that you cannot resist guessing the number. Captain D. J. Proudfoot has been kind enough to vouch for the correct count which will be kept secret to the end of the week. A prize worth thinking about will be given, and the results announced in the papers.

"Sir Wilfred" will be an added attraction at the booth and will cheerfully perform for the ladies and gentlemen without any charge, just for the sheer delight of giving them pleasure.

Miss Margaret Ryan, girls' work secretary of the Y.W.C.A., will be in charge of the booth, assisted by Miss Gertrude Wood, Miss Charlotte Crawford, Miss Willena Graham, Miss Doris Flower, Miss Helen and members of the committee.

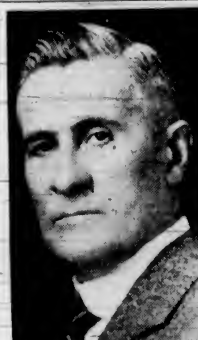

FINE POINT IN GOLF

LONDON (C)—Under an amateur status rule, the entry of J. B. Stevenson, employed by a firm of golf manufacturers, was this week rejected by the committee of the Eden tournament at St. Andrews, of which Stevenson has been the winner the last two years.

One Grand Dame—How's your daughter's golf?
Another Grand Dame—She says she's going around in less and less every week.

First Grand Dame—I don't doubt that. I asked about her golf.

KENNEL CLUB SHOW TO BE FAIR FEATURE

Hundreds of Entries Received for Annual Dog Show at Willows

DR. PORTER MILLER IS CHOSEN JUDGE

The Victoria City Kennel Club will again stage a dog show in connection with the annual exhibition. The date of the dog show is September 11, the most having been reduced to one day instead of two, owing to unforeseen circumstances. Hundreds of entries have been received.

The services of Dr. Porter Miller, of Los Angeles, have been obtained to judge all breeds. This will be his first appearance in Victoria in the role of judge, and only his second time in this capacity in British Columbia. His licence permits him to judge all breeds in Canada and the United States. The club is very fortunate in securing a judge with such a great knowledge of the canine, and in this respect he is rated among the best on the North American continent. Judging and raising dogs is what might be termed a religion with him and exhibitors are assured of an honest and fearless opinion.

TO MAIL ENTRIES

Mrs. Davidson, the show secretary, reports that a very inviting premium list and classification has been prepared and forwarded to the Canadian Kennel Club at Toronto, under whose rules the show will be held.

As in previous years, exhibitors will be provided with a free pass to the grounds and the show building. The committee in charge of the event are very optimistic of the outcome and have received great encouragement from the members of the club, and many outside fanciers, have sent in entries.

FLIGHT...by W. D. TIPTON and J. H. MASON

C's biography, written in his own words, reads: "I was born January 13, 1892, in Bridgeton, Nova Scotia. Not being one of quintuplets, Canada made me earn my own living, so I emigrated to the States. Started at fourteen, wrapping hams in a packing plant, saw I had a long way to go to catch up to Armour, so switched to banking for eight years, leaving just before they investigated the bank. In 1914 I operated an Uncle Tom's Cabin Co. in New England, selling hot dogs, but could not compete with the codfish. I took up aviation. "In 1916 I gave up wrecking my own plane and started on those of the Royal Air Force. I brought down more planes than Immanuel. At last the English sent me to the front, hoping I would land on some of the enemy. After some night bombing and Zeppelin patrols I did night flying instruction until the armistice. "When peace broke out I returned to Canada and flew forest patrol. When the depression hit Canada, I hit the States again and tested planes for Glenn Martin. Thence to the West Indies to start the first airline in those parts. Returned to the States to fall into Lake Erie in a Loening Amphibian and had to swim five miles for help. Flew for another company until it went broke and finally came to New York where I found many of the natives spoke English. Have given up flying as a profession and am now fairly respectable."

WHY IS IT "POSER"?
Governments, like individuals, are these days constantly beset by posers—perplexing questions or situations whose solution presents a difficult problem. Just why such circumstances should be so-called is interesting.

Poser is the noun form of the verb pose, meaning, among other things, as we know, to place oneself in a position. This sense it comes honestly by, since we have it from the French poser, to set; to put or apply (one thing to another). Another derivative of this French word is the now obsolete English apose, also apose, both of them in the sense of examining or quizzing through questions—trying. In other words, to establish a different position. Thus we have again the interesting recurrence in our language of the disappearance of the root source, but the survival of the sense, in a modified form of the original word.

BURNS CLUB TO START SEASON

Trustee W. T. Straith to Give Address in Chamber of Commerce

The 1935-36 season of the Victoria Burns Club will begin Tuesday night, when the first meeting of the Fall season will be held in the Chamber of Commerce auditorium.

Trustee W. T. Straith will be the guest speaker, taking as his subject "The Scot as a Pioneer in Canada." Mrs. Jaffray will play several Scottish airs on the piano, and Mrs. Scott-Burritt and Harry S. Hay will sing a number of Scotch songs. A number of the prize-winning dancers at the recent Highland games will dance.

There will be a short business session during the evening, and refreshments will be served at the close. The chair will be occupied by W. A. Jameson, president.

'MOVIE' IS MADE WITHOUT CAMERA

First Color Film of Kind Shown in London by Post Office

LONDON, Sept. 7 (CP-Havas).—The first motion picture film ever to be made without a camera was shown to the public here last night under the auspices of the Postoffice. It consisted of colored patterns which moved in tempo with a rumba playing on the sound track of the film. The patterns were applied directly to the film by hand.

The invention was made by an Australian artist, Len Lye, who sought by means of a film to avoid the mechanical difficulties encountered in providing a color accompaniment to music by means of electric lights.

The Postoffice has ordered other films of the same nature, which will be used to advertise its service.

Jane Dixon Says:

YOUNG GIRLS DO NOT TAKE TRIPS WITH MEN UNLESS THEY ARE "ON THE LOOSE" AND ARE DEFIANT OF CONVENTIONS THAT PRESERVE A DECENT SOCIETY

Another round-up. All the way from parental pettiness to perfume. With the fillip of love. No round-up would be complete without its plentiful seasoning of heart problems.

Agnes: Your parents want you to marry the man twice your age because he has money. They object to the boy you love because he has only a good job and a future. Take the boy you love.

It is you who must live with the man you marry. Your parents can't do the living for you.

Puzzled: I do not need to tell you that you should not go to Ted's cottage on the lake unless you are properly chaperoned. Young girls do not take trips with men unless they are "on the loose" and are defiant of conventions that preserve a decent society. If Ted has told you he cannot marry you and has given you a convincing reason for his statement, I can see nothing except unhappiness in a continuation of your courtship.

Elaine: In my opinion the young man is unreasonable and ridiculously opinionated when he asserts: "Perfume is a sign of fastness." On the contrary, perfume is dainty and feminine. Good perfume is to the sense of smell what a delicious viand is to the sense of taste or what fine music is to the sense of hearing.

Broken-Hearted: I wish I knew your unmarried aunt. I'd like to tell her that tampering with the United States mail is a Federal offence. It is punishable by law. Write your friend and explain what happened.

GIVE HER TIME TO THINK

B.H.: You are thirty-four. She is eighteen. What of it? You are a young man. She is a young woman. Diamas worry on this score. Do not speak to her again of love for the present. Go on being kindly and generous and big brotherly as you were before the proposal. Give her time to think the matter over. If propinquity and consideration and love cannot win your suit, you are not destined to marry this girl.

D.H.: Sorry, but information concerning persons who write to this column is confidential. The man who wrote a letter to me no little. I'm wondering why you are so interested.

Irish Nightingale: If your heart and soul have been set on the stage since girlhood, your heart is not strong enough and you are not never been on the stage. This, despite the fact you have been selected as the prize beauty of your city and you have a "glorious" soprano voice. I suggest that you go to a music school or teacher in your city and try to get an audition. If your voice is as good as you believe it to be, you will find no difficulty in obtaining a market for it. First-class song birds are rare.

I wouldn't worry about being "above" my neighbors. Every human being is a temple, and it is up to you to find where the incense burns in the temple. If your nerves are going—going—gone, see a doctor and have him order a change.

STORMY LOVE

A YOUNG NAVY MAN'S ROMANCE BY BELLE BURNS CROMER

CHAPTER XXVI

By late June the rudder was completed and proved, yet Val found himself daily postponing his report to Captain Edding. What delayed him from turning over his device to the navy he could not himself clearly understand. Whereupon he began to avoid the perplexing question. He resolved to put off its solution until after the expiration of his two weeks' leave, which was to start within a few days.

Added to this quandary, he was worried by the widening breach between Lia and himself. For from the day, not long after her birthday, when he had definitely refused Maurice Cordray's proposition that he resign from the navy and allow the boat-builder to put his invention on the market, Lia had reproached him bitterly. Since her arguments had proved futile, she had sunk into a moody lethargy during which, clad in the inevitable Chinese robe, bracelets clinking cigarette in a jade holder, she lay on the satin divan for sullen hours at a stretch. Indeed, these last few days she disturbed this smouldering passivity only when she slipped out alone for the long strolls she took in the dusk or at night. On the evening before Val's leave started, she was wrapped in a cloud of this unhappy silence. Val watched her with troubled eyes and presently he crossed to seat himself beside her and catch her inert hand in his warm, brown fingers.

"I know I've left you too much alone lately," he said slowly. "I can understand it has been dull for you with me plugging away everlastingly on the rudder. But now that's finished and out of the picture. My leave is here. And so let's step out and have a swell holiday. Shall we? We'll dine, dance and take in all the new shows in Seattle. The tennis and golf are perfect this sunny weather. I'll even try to manage a trip to Victoria, if you say so, and we'll play the idle rich at the Empress for a day or two."

That roused her until she found his plans included only themselves. "Let's invite the crowd to Victoria," she coaxed. "I'd adored that. It's great fun up there. And I know, if you suggested it, Maurice Cordray would take us on his yacht."

"Listen, I'm not asking favors of Cordray," he broke in impatiently.

Lia Lay on the Divan Pretending to Be Asleep

"And I wish I could make you understand that living on my salary can't include entertaining a crowd. I've explained a dozen times, dear, that the stocks I have left pay no dividends. I've had one salary cut and am likely to have another."

"Please don't start that 'tosome talk again,' she pleaded wearily. "Scrimpling! Poverty! I'm so bored and sick of it. When you have only to be sensible about your invention to enjoy every luxury. But you've been unreasonable about everything lately. Fancy not even being able to invite our friends to have a cocktail with us in this silly old yard."

Jan, in white linen sport dress and with a red silk bandana knotted about her bright hair, waved an indignant hand and smiled in his direction. "My sincere gratitude, mother's helper," she called softly.

Ken, who lately had grown a devilishly becoming moustache, lounged on the deck beside her, looking like a handsome buccaner in dark blue slacks, boots and striped jersey.

"Now, Cromwell, let this thing topple a pair of legs any foolish girl might covet, sit nearby chatting with Rita Nibury and young Mrs. Biddle. Val paid no attention to their conversation until a stray sentence or two suddenly snatched at his interest. "And everyone else suspected how he got that job with Cordray." He was galvanized to hear Mrs. Cromwell say, "He is a dear, youngest and it paddens me to see that red-head make a fool of him. If I'm not mistaken, though, she is beginning to pay the piper."

The children clamored for him to continue the exciting tale he had been recounting so that he lost the rest of Mrs. Cromwell's remarks. However, he guessed it had been she and Brad they discussed and a furious impulse, with fiery indignation gripped him. Why should any commercial plane builder be eager to employ the navy's finest flyer? Hadn't Brad already landed three big contracts for Cordray?

CHILDREN GIVEN JUBILEE MEDALS

Concert Presented by Britannia Branch of Canadian Legion For Children

More than 250 children of members of Britannia Branch, Canadian Legion, Friday night were presented with Silver Jubilee medals at a special concert in the A.O.F. Hall. D. G. Holmes, president, made the presentations.

The principal speaker was Brigadier D. J. MacDonald, officer commanding M.D. No. 11. He delivered the Silver Jubilee message of His Majesty to the children. In commenting on the King's address, Brigadier MacDonald urged the young men and women to build themselves into fine citizens.

William Langdon addressed the gathering on "What I Saw at the Jubilee." Rev. E. F. Church also spoke briefly.

Those taking part in the musical programme, arranged by P. C. Payne, chairman of the branch's entertainment committee, included: J. G. G. who presented a Punch and Judy show and sleight-of-hand display; Arthur Jackman, baritone solo; and an act by "Yorkie," the ventriloquist.

BANFIELD, Sept. 7.—Still another cougar has been killed within the confines of Banfield Village. A large male attacked and killed a goat belonging to Adolph Lindberg. Lindberg shot at and wounded the cougar, which ran off into the bush.

Next day W. J. McDonald, with his dogs, tracked the cougar and shot it. The animal measured over eight feet.

Highly Praised For Success of Dancing School

Mrs. Dorothy Cox, principal of the Western School of Dancing, has won glowing tribute through the success achieved since the inauguration of the school. The salient feature of the school, it is to inculcate health, carriage and poise through the medium of dancing instruction.

Mrs. Cox is a member of the Association of Operatic Dancing of Great Britain and also is an ex-social of the Imperial Society of Teachers of Dancing, qualifying for the title of "Dancing Master."

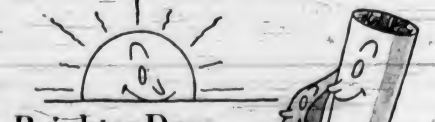

All branches of dancing are taught at the Western School of Dancing, privately or in class, to professionals, amateurs, teachers and children.

Junior ballroom classes are conducted for children, in addition to adult ballroom classes.

The school's Junior Dramatic Club recently carried off the British Columbia Junior Challenge Cup, the adjudicators being loud in their praise, both of the performers and the sound training which was evidenced.

The QUEEN CHARLOTTE ISLANDS

MASSETT

Haida Gwaii

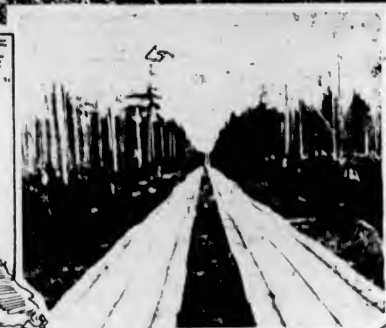

WALTER R.
ASHFORD

* QUEEN CHARLOTTE CITY "

'SKIDEGATE INDIAN VILLAGE'

PORT CLEMENTS - PLANK ROAD

TO many people the name "Queen Charlotte Islands" means some group of islands off the north-west coast of British Columbia. Even to those who studied their geography right here in our own Province, it may mean little more than this. To those who took their schooling in other parts of the world the name is, perhaps, only a geographical term possessing little or no meaning for them as to location, size or value. One English lady quite blissfully expressed her ignorance of that section of our geography by asking me what train was taken, to reach the islands. It is not surprising that such a condition should exist. The islands, located where they are, and in their present state of development, are relatively inaccessible; but I believe that in the future, with capable and sane direction, they will play an important part in the activities of our Province.

The Queen Charlotte Island group is composed of two large islands, Graham at the north and Moresby at the south, and a large number of small islands found particularly along the coast of the southern island, which has a much more irregular coastline than that of the northern island. The advantage of the number of inlets in Moresby will be mentioned later in dealing with the lumbering industry. Of the two large islands, the south island is by far the more mountainous, Graham being of fairly low elevation, particularly in the north and east. Much of the land on Graham is muskeg, supporting only meagre growth and a few stunted trees. However, west of Masset Inlet the country is more hilly, and the world's finest spruce is found in this region.

As a whole, the islands have a very agreeable climate, no extremes of temperature being found in any part. This moderation of climate is due to several geographic factors. First, it is due to the insularity of the group. Being of a fairly small area, the islands are under the complete influence of the sea and the winds blowing from it. Again, there are few high mountains to obstruct the passage of these winds, so that they can exert their influence over all parts. The relatively low altitude makes for an evenness of temperature over the whole. The temperature in winter rarely falls below zero, although to a person accustomed to a dry climate it feels much colder. In the Summer, excess temperatures are never found. Rainfall is abundant throughout the year, those portions along the west coast receiving more than those farther east. The prevailing winds during the rainy season come from the southwest and southeast gales accompanied by rain are of frequent occurrence. They are more or less regarded as a daily feature of the weather.

An Interesting History

THE Queen Charlotte Islands, in common with the rest of British Columbia, have an interesting history, dating from the arrival of the Spaniards on this Coast, and possibly earlier. Spaniard, Langara y Masada, are said to have sailed up Masset Inlet some time in the sixteenth century, hence the name of the inlet and of the town at its entrance—but, as in other parts, the Spaniards failed to make use of their precedence in exploration, and no settlements were made. The Indians found on the islands were known as Haidas, and were held in awe by all other Indian tribes up and down the British Columbia Coast. They were famous for their raids, the purpose of which was to obtain slaves, on other tribes from the Naas to the Columbia Rivers. These raids were usually made in canoes constructed of red cedar, and for the making of which the Haidas were supreme among Coast Indians. Some of these canoes reached a length of seventy feet and were truly masterpieces of Indian art. Our only regret is that more of this fine work has not been preserved so that posterity could actually see for itself what masters of their craft these Indians were. The Hudas are still seafaring men and still expert fishermen and in the early Spring their villages are hives of industry preparing their boats to reap the harvest of the sea.

The first missionary, Archdeacon Collison, came to the Islands in the year 1875 and set up a mission at old Masset, which stands to this day. He tells of his attempts to Christianize the savages in his book, "The Wake of the War Canoe" and his story is one filled with adventure, hard-lup and inspiring effort. Previous to the coming of Archdeacon Collison to Masset, the Indians had divided themselves into two groups, one remaining at Masset and the other congregating itself at Skidegate, on the southeast coast of Graham Island. After achieving success at Masset, Archdeacon Collison moved his efforts to Skidegate, and there met with equal success. Something of the danger and the immensity of the task confronting this missionary may be gathered from a remark of a Hudson's Bay official who brought Archdeacon Collison to Masset in the first instance. This gentleman cheered the young missionary with the statement that he did not expect him to outlive the first year with the Hlaidas,

At different periods in their early development the Islands were the scene of fur-trading enterprises by different fur companies and by individuals. The Hudson's Bay Company made an early establishment there, and were particularly interested in obtaining ing the skins of the sea otter and the fur seal.

Decline in Recent Years

THE peak of the development of the Queen Charlotte Islands was reached during the war, when they were famous for their airplane supply. Settlements had first started as far back as 1880, but these first courageous pioneers were unable to make a livelihood from their chosen abode and soon departed. In 1907 a second group of settlers came to the Islands, and this time were more successful in making the Islands productive. Just prior to and during the war there were several thousand people on the Islands. As mentioned before, the world's finest spruce for airplane construction was obtained there at that time. Lumber mills and logging camps were dotted at every convenient place and were kept running day and night to supply the demand. Today, however, the sites of these former camps and mills present a sorry spectacle—dilapidated buildings and a few pieces of twisted machinery are perhaps all that remain of a once prosperous settlement.

Since the war, the Islands have not progressed as they should have done. Settlement has decreased until today there are not more than a few hundred people on the whole group. Industrial activity has also declined. The two principal industries today are fishing and logging. The former is perhaps the more important, of the two and occupies the attention of a large number of men during the Summer months. Logging is carried on principally on Moresby Island, and the industry continues itself to the cutting of timber in preparation for the mills in other localities. Mining has been attempted at different places without a great deal of success. Coal was early discovered, and some even exported, but all attempts in that industry have ceased. Any mineral-bearing fields that may exist are being held for future development. Small quantities of gold also have been discovered, but not enough to warrant any extensive operations. Another industry of importance during the winter is especially to fishermen is trapping. There is a great variety of fur-bearing animals round the islands, but in the latter end of the season are found in fair quantities, and the climate is right to procure a good haul. Thus the present settlers have developed a fair range of industries and can earn a substantial living for themselves. In time, with perseverance and with the incultivation of a pioneer spirit among the settlers, the islands can regain their former position and can even go further and become a valued part of our province.

A Holiday of Discovery

A TRIP to the Queen Charlotte Islands would provide the average person with a rather novel experience and with a journey which is off the beaten track. Let us imagine, then, that we are bound for the Queen Charlottes. To one of a romantic turn of mind the name itself is rather pleasing and one from which may be conjured up all sorts of pictures of Indian and of prehistoric scenes.

Prince John, a C.N.R. steamer, from Vancouver. The journey is different from the very beginning, because the John is a "different" boat. You may see it standing at the dock in Vancouver and to the casual onlooker or one who is unfamiliar with her the John is just another C.S. boat and perhaps her odd appearance will provoke mirth and contempt rather than any higher emotions. Just to travel on her once means that you will always have a warm spot in your heart for her, although she may have treated you rather roughly at different times during the voyage. Perhaps it is her crew that makes the trip so enjoyable. You have not been aboard many hours before you are acquainted with every detail about the ship, and perhaps you have been greeted by the captain with a cheery "Good morning," and asked if all your wants have been attended to. The rest of the crew will make themselves just as agreeable, and once the right mental attitude is struck between passengers and crew, you have nothing to do but enjoy yourself for the rest of the journey. There is no doubt the John is a "different" boat.

A Few Japanese Customs

By Dewina Pollard

PERHAPS in no country of the world does custom play such an important role as in Japan. When I first came to this country I would frequently ask Japanese friends the reason for so and so, and they would usually elicit the response "It is Japanese custom." I soon learned that this was final and inexcusable and admitted of no argument—it had been done for centuries in the past and would continue to be done for countless years to come.

The most outstanding feature is that it is a nation's custom. If any man considers himself he should come to Japan; his self-esteem and importance cannot help but be bolstered up. The rule of "ladies first" is reversed and men walk first into restaurants and theatres, board trains and motor cars, merely followed by their womenfolk. One day I got on a bus which was full and I was the only woman passenger in the bus and the only person standing—and I remained standing.

Reversed Courtesy

Quite often students and men who have been abroad will get up and give their place to a foreign woman, but never to one of their own race. While riding in a local train one day a man and his wife got on; there was only one vacant seat so, of course, the man took it. He was heard to remark to his wife "You had better go into the next carriage and find yourself a seat."

The woman went, no doubt thinking how considerate her husband was to think of her. A Japanese woman is not supposed to have a mind of her own at all, in even the most ordinary, trivial things she waits for him to tell her what to do. Japanese men do not seem to want their feminine relatives to have any initiative at all. Very early in life little girls learn that they must give way to little brothers. A Japanese girl is taught three obediences—to her parents, her husband and her children (that is sons).

Yet this life of self-abnegation has not spoiled the Japanese women as one might think. They are very sweet, kind little ladies. When entertaining guests in the home it is the custom for the wife not to sit at the table, she serves and stands, everything goes smoothly in the kitchen. This custom would be a relief in countries where the wife has to cook the dinner and then be the charming hostess at the table while in reality her mind is in the kitchen wondering just how the next course is doing and whether times are getting cold or hot.

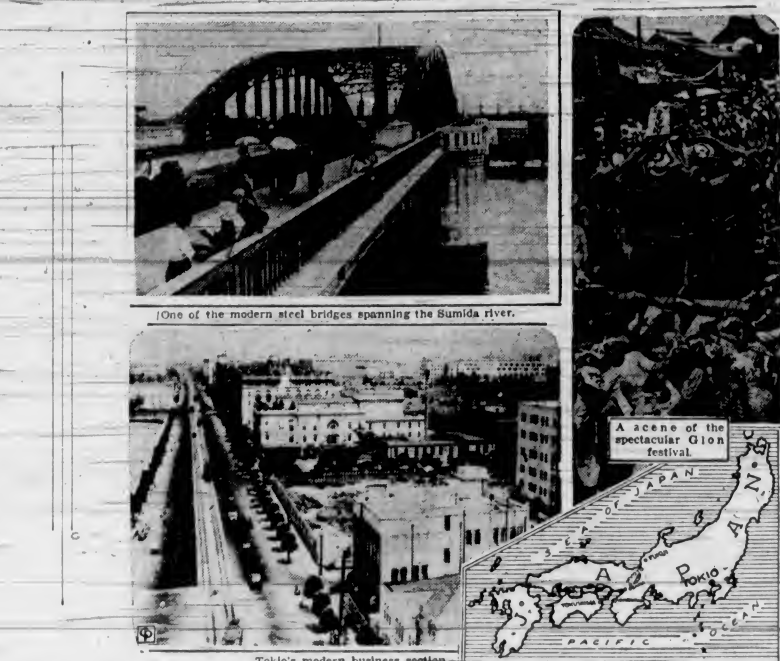

Giving Presents

Perhaps in no country in the world has present giving become so important. You visit a Japanese friend to see you and she brings a gift.

The wrapping of presents is an art in itself and is beautifully done. They are usually placed in a box which is wrapped in a special thick white paper. This is tied with a silk cord and the ends are left out and held red; which makes one red bow and end and one white bow and end, and then under the string at one side is placed a little red and white gift insignia, the whole giving a very charming effect.

When Japanese make valuable presents to each other, the gift is placed in a lacquered tray and covered with a silk furoshiki, a square of silk cloth reserved for such occasions, printed with a design in one corner and with four tassels. Ignorant foreigners have been known to keep the tray and furoshiki, thinking they were part of the gift, but the correct thing is to take the gift and send back the tray and furoshiki with a piece of paper, a matchbox or some little thing, a promise to pay or receipt as it were.

At funerals there is an excellent custom

Tokyo's modern business section.

TOKYO (for Tokyo), capital and largest city of Japan, is situated on the southeast side of the main island, Honshu, on the Bay of Tokyo, covering an area of more than thirty square miles. The population of Greater Tokyo in a recent census was 5,311,000. A little hamlet called Yedo at one time stood on the seashore in the vicinity of the city's present district of Asakusa. Most of the present business section of Tokyo was covered by water from the bay when Yedo was still a small place. Towards the end of the sixteenth century, Tokugawa Ieyasu took possession of Yedo, and in 1603 made it the seat of his government and the empire. As a result, Yedo grew rapidly and soon became the most important city in Japan. Due to catastrophes and a weakening of the house of Tokugawa, the population had fallen off considerably about 1860. Following the fall of the shogunate in 1868, it was made the eastern capital of the empire, and its name was changed to Tokyo.

Most of the trade of Tokyo is carried on by way of Yokohama, due to the fact that it is unfavorably situated for commerce. The industrial interests are few, although there are numerous factories in the neighborhood.

An interesting spot is the palace inclosure within the grounds of the ancient castle. The grounds once were surrounded by a wall and a long moat, but the wall has been partially levelled and the moat filled up. To the east of the castle is the commercial portion of the city, where many of the buildings are of modern architecture. In the northern part is the building once used by the great Confucian College and the Imperial University.

of sending money, but this, as well as presents at weddings and on all other occasions, calls for a return gift. There is a fixed scale—one-half to two-thirds the value of the original gift. The leading department stores have bureaus to attend to these gifts received and the occasions on which they were given and they will attend to the return presents.

Houses and Inns

The rooms in houses and inns are divided by sliding panels that fit into grooves. It is an excellent idea, as they can be removed and the room made larger or smaller to fit requirements. It is the very last word in Japanese and modern architecture, even slightly push a panel and look into the next room.

In Japanese inns the four walls of your room slide—and it is not possible to lock them—the two at the ends into corridors and the two at the ends into other rooms. From the corridors the maids and porters wander in and out without knocking, wishing to be of service, and it is quite a feat to put on or take off one's nightgown in privacy. Seeing one in a state of undress means nothing to a Japanese of either sex.

At the ends of the room, just the other side of the sliding panels which form the walls, are other rooms occupied by guests. Sometimes men can be heard in them, who are rather the worse for sake (native wine), but even so I have never known the panels to be touched and no one ever intrudes.

This country is a decided mixture of East and West, in many ways clinging to the traditions of the past but in others very progressive. One of the outstanding features that the West would do well to emulate is reforestation. Hills and vacant places in quite remote spots are planted with trees and when trees are cut down in any number they are replaced. There are no ugly, sawed off banks denuded of beautiful big trees that yoke centuries to grow, sacrificed for commercial gain, as one sees in some places.

School Children

Another admirable feature is the way school children are taken around to see their own country. Each class is taken for one or more trips a year, the older the children the farther afield they go, so that by the time pupils leave school they have a very good idea of their own country.

An article on customs would not be complete without mention of the arranged marriages. A man cannot marry without his parents' consent until he is thirty and a girl must be twenty-five. Like everything else there are advantages and disadvantages to the plan. A disadvantage is that often young people are forced into marriages to suit their parents. In olden times a bride and groom did not see each other until the marriage ceremony but now they usually meet two or three times before the wedding.

It sometimes happens that young people meet and fall in love, but in such cases parental consent is often withheld as the affair has not been duly arranged by a go-between. Love suicide frequently follows—the young people preferring death together to life apart.

But on the other hand there are advantages to the system; it is direct, there is no beating around the bush, and it does away with all question of woman's wiles and sex appeal—the interested parties can state their preferences in a mate and the parents can try to find someone to fill the bill. This looking for a husband becomes quite a business. When a girl reaches an age when her parents think she should marry, they have some nice photographs taken of her and put out fliers in all directions, the relatives and friends are asked to watch out for likely prospects. A girl who is an only child (something almost unheard of) or a girl with brothers but no sisters, is harder to marry off, men believing that they are apt to be strong-minded, and above all things the Japanese man wants a submissive wife, and why not when he can get one by so specifying? The lonely male dies hard and men everywhere, particularly in the older countries, have not granted prerogatives without a struggle. We think now that the Japanese women are treated most slightly, but people who have been here for years say that they are much freer than they were. In older times a woman never left her home, now she often accompanies her family on little outings and to the cinema. It formerly was the custom for a wife to walk three feet behind her husband, but now she walks alongside him. Groups of ladies are even going so far as to have luncheon and tea parties at foreign hotels.

Distinct Epochs

Before and after the earthquake are two distinct epochs in Japan, just as before and after the war are in Canada and the United States. The generation growing up now have been influenced more than their elders. The dress of the women is perhaps the most noticeable instance. Before the earthquake few Japanese women wore foreign clothes, usually only a few who had been abroad, and the department stores did not stock them, but now that is changed. All school girls wear school uniforms (usually blue serge skirts and white blouses); the stores have large foreign departments and some of the trucks worn by Japanese girls are quite smart and chic.

International marriages are a live question in this part of the world. Taken all in all I have known several, but over a period of ten years I have only known two which have taken place here, and in both cases the girl has come to Japan to marry the man, having met him when she was living abroad. Generally speaking, while these marriages may be successful whilst away, they go on the rocks when the interested parties return to this country. The standards of living, the attitude of masculine superiority, where the slightest wish of the head of the house is law in the home, and the subservience of the woman are all so different that friction almost invariably follows. Foreign men married to Japanese women get along better than foreign women married to Japanese men. A man can't help but be flattered when he is regarded almost as a god and surrounded with an aroma of devotion and service. With a foreign wife the situation is different; she is not accustomed to being regarded almost as a servant by her husband and being at the back and call of a mother-in-law.

But in no case should there be any children; they are the tragedy of mixed marriages, being neither of the East nor of the West. In a few isolated cases they are able to hold their own and rise above the handicap, but in most cases it endangers the innocent virtue and wrecks his life. As usual it is harder for girls than for boys, but both have a better chance away from Japan and as far from the Orient as possible.

Japanese Mothers

Japanese mothers love their babies and usually are slaves to them—especially to the boys—but they have not yet learned to care for them intelligently. While the birth rate is very high, six children being the average in a family, infant mortality ranks as high in Japan as in any country where such statistics are kept. Any mention of birth control is sternly frowned upon by the majority, particularly by the men.

When on outings the fathers often look after the children, but as is not unknown with Western fathers, the child is returned to the mother when it becomes fractious. Japanese babies are not brought up with any regular habits of eating or sleeping or anything else. The grown-ups in the family all delight to abuse the infant and do so from morning until night, thinking that they are being kind to the child.

In the care of children the missions are also to the fore—many mission hospitals having clinics where mothers are taught how to care for their children, but even so the mother often cannot put her newly acquired knowledge into practice, as her husband and family are likely to oppose these new fangled foreign ideas, and in takes a strong minded woman to stand out against Japanese custom and family and Japanese girls are not brought up to be strong minded.

A few illustrations of topsy turviness in this country will be a fitting finale to these rambling remarks.

Amusing Contrasts

After ten years in Japan the contrasts are still a source of amusement. It is interesting to see how these people, even when doing a thing for the first time, will naturally do it just the opposite way to what we do. It is as natural for them to do it in a way that appears backwards to us, as it is for us to do it the other way, so there is no thing which is right or is a difference in mentality, in the way of thinking.

A few of these contrasts may be of interest. When threading a needle they put the needle on the thread instead of the thread in the needle. In sewing they sew away instead of towards them and move the cloth instead of the needle. It looks terribly awkward to Westerners, but they get there and do beautifully neat work. A carpenter saws and planes by pulling instead of pushing. Gifts are presented at the end of a visit and are not opened in the donors' presence. At formal affairs the social time takes place first, then the dinner, and the guests depart immediately afterwards. The men are always seated first and when the food is placed they are served first and then the ladies. The men sit at one end of the table and the ladies at the other. In Japanese inns the hotel provides tooth brushes (a new one for each guest) and sleeping kimonos, but guests must bring their own towels. In the case of towels the one born last is considered the eldest. Doors open out when you expect them to open in and vice versa. When a thing does not work one way try it the other—such things become a matter of course. Men check their shoes and wear their hats upon entering a place of entertainment, but the women do the back instead of the front. Papers are clipped together on the right hand side instead of the left. Kimonos have the left side uppermost, only corpses have kimonos fastened to the right. Men raise their hats to men but not to women. They laugh when they speak of the death of a relative, the idea being not to make the listener feel sad. One is always encountering this upside-downness, even keyholes are sometimes wrong end up, but the funniest thing is the revolving door. Many hotels and modern office buildings are now equipped with them. There is a little metal sign on each division of the door which says "push" in English and Japanese, but in spite of this pull and often I have seen them trying to pull and when the door wouldn't move, walk away thinking it was having a rest that day.

We leave Vancouver on a Saturday afternoon. Soon we have passed Stanley Park and find ourselves in the Strait of Georgia. Before we have had time to get our bearings upon us, and during that time we pass through Seymour Narrows and Johnstone Straits. Sometime the next morning we pass Malakoff Island and can see Indian School, where Indian pupils are received from different villages up the Coast. In mid-afternoon of the next day, if we have not been delayed, as often happens on the John, we pass on our left the extreme north end of Vancouver Island and enter Queen Charlotte Sound. There the fun starts for passengers aboard the John. It is like the Northern lights, but not like the sheltered-made passage, but loads in a northwesterly direction towards the open Pacific Ocean. There are times when that sound is as calm as a mill pond, and there are times again when it seems as if the whole of the Pacific Ocean was endeavouring to force its way through the narrow opening, and being thwarted in its attempts it rolls and tosses and seems bent on destroying anything which comes in its pathway. Into such a maelstrom the one-funnel John pluckily steers her course.

Imagine yourself a passenger when the Sound is at its worst or its best, whichever way you choose to look at it. The position may take twelve or fifteen hours or even much longer when the weather is really bad. There are times when the level of sailors who were somewhere far removed from the Pacific Ocean, and many of the passengers will spend most of the time consoling themselves in their cabins. The John is a good sea boat and you can feel comparatively sure that she will withstand the buffeting to which she is subjected. Suddenly the boat will go down nose first as if trying to imitate a submarine and then she will rise as high as she can and then down again. And all the while this is being accompanied by a side rolling motion. Meanwhile, the passenger is lying in his cabin hoping that Providence will preserve him and that the boat will not sink, and at the same time nursing an intense feeling of discomfort somewhere in the lower regions. At one moment he is terrified of upsetting a watery grave and the next he is praying that he will, to relieve him of his misery.

Reach Moresby Island

SOONER or later all things come to an end, and the poor seafaring passenger who has finally succeeded in telling himself to sleep will awake to find himself in calm waters and everything on the ship proceeding as it should do. We are across the Sound and our first stop is Rose Harbor, at the extreme south end of Moresby Island. If you are in doubt as to your location your sense of smell will soon give you some indication as to the nature of the place, if not its name. Its name is not at all appropriate, as anyone who has been in the vicinity can testify. There is certainly no indication of roses around the place, for it is at Rose Harbor that one of the two Queen Charlotte whaling stations is located. The whaling industry is of prime importance to the Islands, and they are very favorably located for it. Another large whaling station is found at Naden Harbor, on the north end of Graham Island.

Our boat moves on, through sheltered waters between the islands in Hecla Strait up the east coast of Moresby Island. We stop at numerous little settlements, principally logging camps, some of which are led by Selkirk Bay, Lockport and Cumshinga. It is at these places that we see the logging industry in full swing. Everybody in the camp comes down to witness the arrival of the boat which brings their mail, their provisions, and which is their only contact with civilization. We cannot help but admire the fortitude of these people, closed off as they are from the rest of the world in a small settlement where they may not be able to take even a good long walk. Yet they give us a hearty smile at our arrival and wish us "Bon Voyage," and leave a pleasant memory in our hearts when we leave. I remember particularly one incident that happened on my trip south for Christmas last year. We stopped at one very small settlement, and in addition to a few men on the wharf, there was a Japanese woman and a small child. There was just enough snow on the ground to give everything the appearance of Christmas, and we were all anxious that the boat should proceed as fast as possible in order to arrive home by Christmas Day. It was the Japanese woman that particularly drew my attention. She seemed so happy in spite of her surroundings and talked gaily back and forth with the crew. When we were leaving she seemed very good-bye and wished us "Merry Christmas" with as good feeling as if we were going to spend Christmas and the comfort of a city rather than in the wilds of the Queen Charlotte Islands.

At the logging camps we may see some novel sights. Very often we see children at some of them, and we may be surprised to see them wearing little hats. On asking the reason for this precaution we will be told that they wear them continually, so that if they fall into the water they will be kept afloat until their cries bring help. It is from these logging camps that spruce logs are taken to be made later into pulp and paper.

The industry is greatly facilitated by the numerous inlets and bays which are found along the east coast of Moresby Island.

At Graham Island

OUR last port of call on Moresby is Skidegate Inlet, between Moresby and Graham Islands, and finally reach Queen Charlotte City, the first port of call on Graham Island. This is the largest settlement to which we have come on our journey so far, and we will see motor cars and other semblances of civilization. About our midday meal from Queen Charlotte City is the Indian village of Skidegate. Here we find, if time permits, a taste of the journey, a well-kept, clean and orderly village, populated entirely by the descendants of the famous Haida. Here we see some of their totem poles, a probably we will be asked to buy some little black, ivory poles that appear at first sight to be made of ebony. But their weight makes this an impossibility, and we are told that they are made of Skidegate slate and that they are carved by the Indians themselves. Skidegate slate is found only in this region, being taken from the hills and carved into it is fast becoming a rarity, and their value is increasing every year.

At Skidegate we see all that remains of the once famous Haida, exalted in legend and story for their bravery and daring, for their skill and cunning. Like other Indian tribes, civilization has overtaken them and they have adopted the customs of the whites, perhaps to their detriment rather than to their benefit. In fact, it is hard to associate the modern Indian with the one of which we read in history. The Government provides excellent facilities for the education of the Indian children, and they wish to become like their white brothers. Technical education for the boys is provided in central parts of the province, to which come Indians from the more isolated sections. The time cannot come too soon when these Indians will take over completely the customs of the whites, and learn to govern themselves accordingly.

But our boat is waiting for us at Queen Charlotte City and we must return and proceed on our way. We again enter Hecla Strait and sail north up the east coast of Graham Island. Hecla Strait is a peculiar body of water, and at times is unhealthy for man or beast. It is very shallow even in the deepest parts, and wind and tide are right, assisted by the weight of the Pacific, it is very unpleasant to be on board a small boat like the John. Particularly is this true around Rose Spit, a long point of land extending into the strait from the northeast section of the island. Once around the landfall found surrounding the spit, we are in comparatively smooth waters and can rest comfortably again. We proceed in a westerly direction until reaching the mouth of Masset Inlet, which is a long, narrow body of water extending from the north coast for thirty miles into Graham Island. At its mouth and for three-fifths of the way down, the inlet is very narrow and requires careful navigation on the part of the ship's captain. At the south end the inlet widens to a width of more than fifteen miles. This lake-like expanse is dotted with islands around its shore and filled with long islands that extend into the interior of the island in all directions.

In Masset Inlet

OUR first stop on entering the inlet is Old Masset, the site of the original Indian village. If we were to examine it closely we would see relics of former days, and perhaps the old mission house of Archdeacon Colson. The most modern civilization found there is a salmon cannery which operates during the summer months. While, perhaps, we are still contemplating the Indian settlement of former times, the stern tells us that we are on our way to New Masset, a short distance down the inlet. Here we stop again and see a village of white tents. "New Masset" is the centre of the fishing activities. There the fishermen put into port for their supplies before going to Langara Island, on the northwest coast of Graham Island. We are soon on our way again, and in approximately two and one-half hours we reach Port Clements at the south end of the inlet. Here we have a village, once the centre of the logging industry, but now a quiet little town with reminiscences of hygone days.

The traveler will, perhaps, ask at this time concerning roads on the Islands. From Port Clements to the east coast there is an interesting road. It is a narrow, winding road constructed entirely of planks laid lengthwise and of sufficient width to take the two wheels of a car. This road is particularly interesting in rainy weather or when there is a little ice on the planks. Joining the plank road at its eastern extremity and continuing south down the east coast is a road leading to Queen Charlotte City and Skidegate. The road is passable at all seasons. Another road from Masset to Tow Hill along the north coast of Graham Island completes the survey of Queen Charlotte roads.

Taking our boat again at Port Clements, we head up Masset Inlet, and again stop at New Masset for a few minutes. We soon leave the inlet and pass into Dixon Entrance and thence to Prince Rupert, where we can renew our acquaintance with terra firma.

This Week's Best Books

By LIBRARIAN SERVICE

A NUMBER of books by new and interesting poets have arrived at the Public Library, and those who want to keep abreast of the modern trends in literature will want to read them. Stephen Spender, Ezra Pound and Robinson Jeffers are among the authors. There are also two plays which will delight the reader of plays or those who read plays with an eye for production; these are "The Late Christopher Bean" by Evelyn Williams, and "A Man's House" by John Drinkwater. There are also a number of books that make light reading for hot summer days; these fiction books include adventure, mystery and Western stories.

"Vienna" by Stephen Spender, is a narrative poem by the young English poet whose first book of lyrics was published in the United States in September. Of that group, which includes W. H. Auden and Cecil Day Lewis, radical in their social and political sympathies, Spender has shown in his work the warmest human note. "Vienna" is, therefore, not only a vivid and stirring account of the insurrectionary events that took place in a passionate defence of the principles and cause behind the revolution, a poem which is tribute to the men who met certain death heroically, and to those who are still bravely, though secretly as monks, carrying on the work of building a new social order. "Vienna" as a whole justifies an excellent choice of material. It is the work of a lyric poet whose strength lies in analysis and exposition, not in the execution of narrative movement, of large-scale objective handling. While there are many fine lyric passages, others are little more than prose statements, some are simple and direct, others irritatingly obscure. But "Vienna" is an appealing piece of work, and as successive to the earlier poems, evidence of this poet's growing strength and perception.

"Late Christopher Bean," by Evelyn Williams, is a charming, simple, entertaining comedy—both on the stage and in the book. Sidney Howard has known what elements of his French model to keep, what to omit, and what details of colorful background to supply. The play should long prove popular with stock companies and little theatres, for it contains most of those qualities which those groups hold in urgent demand. Charles and Betty are a lovely blend of a play of theatrical effectiveness. Sidney Howard has given a New England setting and American characters to this adaptation of a French play, "Prenez Garde la Peinture," by Rene Fauchois. The theme of the play is the influence of the lives of a number of people the unexpected rise in value of the works of a long-dead artist.

"No Retreat," by Horace Gregory, is a second volume of poems by a young American poet, the author of "Liberia Morning House." Modernism though he is, and a stickler for unconventional forms, Mr. Gregory has a true poet's sense of imagery and a flair for metaphor.

By MARION JARREL ANDERSON

"Explosion" (Longmans, Green & Co.), by P. C. Wren.

Not in this reviewer's opinion, up to the usual P. C. Wren standard, although many interesting highlights of the present-day situation are revealed. Whereas some authors are reticent to the point of obscurity in explaining the workings of their principal character's mind, "Explosion" presents such detailed explanations that at times it is almost boring. Naturally one is interested in the way the district superintendent of police, Anthony Steele, struggles at his conclusions concerning the various revolutionary groups who are plotting against the rule of the British Raj, but his reasoning at times seems very convoluted. Nor can one altogether admire his method of obtaining information about the revolutionaries by playing upon the emotions of Betty Gopaladas, an English girl married to an Indian, but secretly in love with Anthony.

The European community at Bhowalgarh was sitting off the edge of a political volcano—and most of them knew it. Anthony Steele had threatened the lives of high-placed officials, in fact, several abortive attempts at assassination had been made. Anthony Steele was out on his wits' ends, not knowing where the danger threatened, until the night a student attempted to kill him. Then, by means of clever questioning, he was able to perceive a vague picture of the plot. He promises the student immunity and the protection of the British, but the terms were more subtle than he had considered, and he found the student's attempt to kill him a betrayal. In this act, he read many things which prompted him to enlist the aid of Betty, whose husband was supposed to be one of the ringleaders in the forthcoming plot.

Plot and counterplot against a background of love and terror form a thrilling and instructive story. The author portrays the situation in India with sympathetic insight.

Jordan River . . . and Back

BY EDNA JACQUES

MY Methodist conscience told me I shouldn't go . . . but the Irish in me egged me on.

I could hear my father as plain as day telling me to save my money for my old age—but I answered him (taciturn as usual) that I might not have an old age, and how cheated I would feel if, having saved and skimped all my life, died without the joy of spending it.

I have a cousin who is very wise. When they were talking about moving to Victoria from the Prairies many arguments were put up that they should stay on the farm a few more years and then move to Victoria.

But she settled the question for once and all by saying: "Oh let's go now, while we're young. If we wait until we are old we won't enjoy ourselves anyway, no matter where we live." And come they did, and have enjoyed every hour of sunshine, every scrap of life in this lovely land of good things.

So that's how I felt about the excursion to Jordan River, to go that very day, while the sun shone above us, the clean, sweet wind blew through the trees and life beat high and wonderful in our veins.

The "Little Comrade" said eagerly: "Yes, let's go before the war starts!" And go we did.

We struck the first snag when Ethel, our little neighbor, arrived—in slacks—and Joyce all dressed up fit to kill in her white silk skirt and new sweater, and feeling as if she owned half of Vancouver Street.

When she saw Ethel she gave a gulp, eyed me in a despairing way as if she expected no favor and announced, half-crying: "I'm not going to wear this old puffed dress. I'm going to wear my dirty slacks!" And wear them she did—along my shame.

But we had a fine day in spite of them, or maybe because of them.

We stormed the bus station in such numbers that they had to put two big buses on to hold us all, a happy holiday crowd, ready for fun.

It was a beautiful ride out. We took the Sonke Road as far as it went, which has more turns and twists than you can count. You swerve from one side to the other in your seat, never strike a real balance before you round another curve, you brace yourself to take it and then another and another, ups and downs, ins and outs, over hills and down dale, rock and brush and trees, a glimpse of the sea, a swoop down hill again, crawling up the other side, the engine's pounding like an old threshing machine at home.

At Sonke we got there off the good civilized road and struck a gravel one, and went on with the game.

Joyce and Ethel giggled and laughed, snatched at each other, held their hands out the window, waved at everyone who passed, fell on each other, necks, shoulders, giggled, hunched, and had the best time of anyone on the bus, if you could tell anything by looks.

One man near me smoked incessantly, cigarette after cigarette, every mile we went. His smoke had to be breathed by us all, whether or no. I often wonder any more to unimpaired others who thus force his unfortunate associates to take his second-hand smoke for hours on end. I'd hate to be the wife of a man like that; she must be a hard row.

There were many faces we knew among the happy passengers, some who served us in store, bank and office, and some just "nodding acquaintances."

There was a little woman from Winnipeg and her husband, who said they enjoyed the scenery very much after the flat prairie, but would rather farm their kind of land than this rock-filled soil.

A pair of lovers sat hand in hand, so unaware of us that we just might as well not have been there at all. They didn't need a picnic to make them happy. Social Credit, Muskrat, shipwreck, cloudburst, hail or rain, rust, drought and depression were all the same to them. They were sitting on top of the world and it was all beautiful.

We arrived at our destination about 12.30 o'clock. We really didn't know this was Jordan River when the bus stopped. Our woman said: "Is this the place? Where's the nice sandy beach, where's the picnic ground . . . facilities?" We went to the picnic ground and there we found the picnic ground, the trees and benches. The poor bus driver threw up his hands in a hopeless gesture. I bet he married, for he seemed to be much too wise to get into an argument with any woman. And so we piled out with our lunches, bags, newspapers, thermos bottles, cushions, bathing suits and extra coats.

The sea was beautiful. There was nothing to kick about there; blue as indigo; it shimmered and glittered in the hot sun, melting away to the dim purple mountains. We could see the rounded point of Cape Flattery, away to the northwest, and beyond that the open sea to China—and another world.

Joyce and Ethel explored the beach to their hearts' content, running back every once in a while to assure themselves that we were still asleep under the trees. They dug holes in the sand; threw rocks into the water, tried to walk on a log, and then, at last, the apple of my eye spied a swing in someone's yard and they made for that with whoops and bounds and didn't care whether the bus went and left them or not from then on.

Dorothy and I walked along the hot gravelly road, leaning over the lovely new bridge at Jordan River, and there in the shadow of it were hundreds of small fish, salmon I guess there were, about a foot to eighteen inches long. The water was alive with them. They were mottled, in a sort of camouflage that seemed like light and shade and so much like the water itself that you had to look twice to make sure they were there at all.

We called the children then and went along to see the power plant.

I am afraid of machinery; it seems uncanny to me. If they left it to me to invent things, we'd still be in the Stone Age, swinging from tree to tree. Nothing would suit my little Comrade better at that. There's still her hero Superman, and her idea of perfect happiness is to live in a cave and have elephants and bears for friends.

But the power plant was wonderful; shining brasses, the floor as clean as a pin, great fly wheels revolving with terrible rapidity, the hum of them pulsing in your ears like an over-worked heart.

I was glad to see the place where our light comes from. How dependent we are on each other. To think that strangers we may never meet are working at their job initially to give us the precious gift of light. That far away, a river flowing clear as crystal is the power behind this little switch in my room that makes the comforting glow of the new rose-colored lamp that I am so proud of.

Coming back along the beach we saw everyone looking out to sea and pointing excitedly, and so we looked too, and just by the point was a great shoal of whales, killer whales they said they were. (They all look bad enough to kill anything, if you ask me.) They were making a great fuss as they went by, a dozen or so of them, rising high from the water as they came up for air, puffing, snorting, splashing and making great headway as they plunged along.

Someone informed us they were making for the salmon traps, and later on, as we came home, we saw them there still raising great clouds of water and spray. I felt sorry for the poor salmon. He's had enough to be caught in a trap without being scared to death by whales.

People began to get into the waiting bus, packing their things away, settling down for the ride home.

Joyce and Ethel kind of crawled into their seats; they weren't quite so funny as they had been on the way out. Even Joyce was subdued, and that's a bad sign. It is just a lot to kill her. Ethel leaned her curly black head against the seat and didn't say much. After a few feeble efforts to be gay, my little Comrade gave it up and sat looking out of the window as the dusty trees went by, occasionally pointing to sheep or cattle along the road.

How good the lights of Victoria looked as we got nearer, swinging at corners, winking at us from the beautiful Japanese Gardens, shining from the windows of little homes, a million tiny suns warming the hearts of us, because a crystal stream at Jordan River had been harnessed and turned into the precious alchemy of light.

Exhibition Week

ALL young people should go to the Exhibition this year. They will learn there about their fathers and mothers and all the other grown-ups have worked, and they will see the best that boys and girls can do.

Of course there will be lots of fun, but the chance to measure your own work by that of others will give the most satisfaction. Go and see if you cannot help to make next year's Fair better in some way than this one. Can you make a better design than the boy or girl that took the prize, or raise finer poultry, flowers or vegetables? Can you take a better photograph, or excel in manual training or needlework? Go to the Fair to see and admire and to measure your own attainment by the line of the exhibitors. None of you can expect now to do as well as the best in any section, but that is no reason why you should not do even better some day.

There are things as well worth while as winning races or games. The management of the Exhibition and the exhibitors believe in work. That is the reason they have taken so much time to show us all the best that nature and man together have been able to produce on this splendid island of ours.

Autumn

Oh welcome to the corn-clad slope
And to the laden tree,
That promises Autumn—for the hope
Of nations turned to thee.
Through all the hours of splendor past,
With Summer's bright career—
And we see thee on thy throne at last,
Crowned monarch of the year.

Thou comest with gorgeous flowers,
That make the roses dim,
With morning mists and sunny hours
And wild birds' harvest hymn:
Thou comest with the night of floods,
And the glow of moonlit skies,
And the glory flung on falling woods
Of thousand mingled dyes.

But never seem'st thy steps so bright
As in the ancient shore,
Since faded from the poet's sight
That golden age of yore.
For early harvest home hath poured
Its gladness on the earth,
And the joy that lights the princely board
Hath reach'd the peasant's hearth.

Of thou, whose silent bounty flows
With gifts that ever claim from us
The harvest of the heart—
If thus Thy goodness crowns the year,
What shall the glory be
When all Thy harvest whitening here,
Is gathered home to Thee!

Orphan, but Happy

This little fawn was found at Yellow Point, V.I., and was taken home and "adopted" by M. G. Hill, R.R. 1, Ladysmith. The adopted fawn has been given the name "Beverly," and, as may be seen from the picture, likes his bottle.

Willie Know-All Is the Teacher's Pet

This is really a naughty trick. And yet I must admit the Willie Know-All at the board has rather asked for it.

He's always right. He's always good. He's such a priggish pup. At any question in the class his paw is always up.

The House in the Tree

WHEN Father saw the tree house he was not at all pleased. He said it looked very untidy, besides being dangerous, and that Masters, the gardener, must take it down at once—their lovely tree house which they had spent all their time making when Mother and Father were abroad.

They had been sure that their parents would think it as wonderful as they did, but Mr. and Mrs. Burton saw only a curious-looking erection like a large, untidy bird's nest, from which dangled pieces of string and old bits of tent cloth.

"They would choose the front garden where everyone can see it," grumbled Father. "We must make it where people can see it," Terence had said. "The Johnsons and the Flemings will be simply green with envy."

The Johnsons and the Flemings both had strict governesses, while the Burtons had no governess at all, but went to school.

Pauline had thought that it would have been more romantic if they had built it in the little wood at the back of the house, but she had not dared to say so.

The day after their parents came back was the day of the village Flower Show, in which everyone seemed to take a great interest except Terence and Tom and Pauline.

Father's hobby was growing cucumbers and Mother went in for anything from a radish to a nectarine. The only one of the three who attempted to grow anything was Pauline, who grew cress. It was eatable cress, but not quite up to exhibition standard.

The servants loved the Flower Show because there were cake-guessing competitions and dancing—all except the cook, Mrs. Muffin, who had flat feet and did not hold with so much standing, as she was left in charge, but after dinner she went off to sleep.

Terence and Tom and Pauline were very wide awake.

"Look here," said Terence, "Father told Masters to take down the tree house tomorrow, but perhaps if we could make it tidy they would let us keep it. If we got some of those boughs that Masters cut for peacocks and twined them round it wouldn't show at all."

They all thought this a good idea, and worked hard all afternoon till they were terrifically hot and quite black from the beach bark.

Suddenly Pauline clutched Tom's arm. "Look! There is a funny-looking man walking round the house, peeping in at the windows!"

They all peered out excitedly. They couldn't see him; very well, but he looked strange and wild-looking, with a colored handkerchief tied round his neck, and he wore a wide-brimmed hat.

"He is a burglar! He has got wind of it that everyone is out and has come to steal the Romney," whispered Tom, who was always reading detective stories.

"But how could he possibly carry it away by himself?" asked Pauline, who had cold shivers running down her spine.

"Don't be idiotic! He'll cut it out of the frame, of course," said Tom scornfully. "Look! He is trying to get into the house through the library window!"

They all watched breathlessly, but the window was fastened and he could not undo it. He turned and began strolling over the grass in the direction of the tree. He seemed a very casual burglar.

"I say," whispered Terence joyfully, "if he comes under us we'll lasso him!" (His favorite stories were Wild West ones.) He made a slip knot in a piece of rope with fingers that trembled with eagerness.

The burglar came up, and when he was just underneath them he actually stopped and lit a cigarette.

Tom threw the lasso deftly and caught him fair and square round the neck. It was thrilling to see the great jump he gave; it was as good as a cinema show. Pauline almost stopped breathing with excitement.

"Don't pull too hard, or you may strangle him," she gasped.

The burglar spluttered and gurgled. His hat was knocked over his eyes and he could see nothing.

"Now someone will have to go down and tie him up," said Terence. But no one seemed eager to go.

"All right, I'll go," said Tom, feeling a terrific hero.

"I'll come, too, then," said Terence, not wanting to be outdone. "Pauline, keep tight hold of the rope and do what I tell you," he commanded.

They slipped down the tree like monkeys and approached the burglar rather cautiously.

"It isn't Terence and Tom!" he exclaimed to their amazement. "Last time I saw you, you were nice little children in the nursery, but now you seem to have turned into savages. Well, this is a nice way to treat an uncle who has given you Christmas presents ever since you were born."

Tom was horrified.

"Leave go of the rope, Pauline!" he shouted, as the truth dawned on him. "It's Uncle Jim!"

"Not the worst kind," Pauline put in anxiously, thinking of the Christmas presents.

"My dear Jim, I hope they haven't hurt you," said their mother.

"Well, they are pretty good at lassoing. I think I shall have to take them all back to my ranch in Iowa, where there are still a few stray cowboys left."

They couldn't believe their ears.

"They are extremely naughty, lassoing people like this. But Masters is taking down their tree house tomorrow," said their father.

"Oh, no!" said Uncle Jim. "They are excellent people. They were splendid the way they guarded your property. Your servants must be all dead; I should think I rang till I was tired and nobody came, and if it hadn't been for them I could have easily stolen all the silver candlesticks in the house even the grand piano. I was just off to fetch a jenny when they caught me. Of course they must have their reward, and tomorrow we will build a super-tree-house in the largest and highest tree in the garden."

Scattering Seeds

ALL Summer gardeners have been up rooting and destroying weeds, and yet next year many of them will reappear or perhaps fresh ones will come. Now and again a flower appears where it was not sown by the gardener.

In many of our beautiful gardens seed is being carefully gathered and stored away for sale or for use next year. But there are many plants that, if no human hand gathered them, would appear and bear flowers, sometimes in distant places.

Little people in early Summer gathered the Jovial globes of the dandelion and blew away the winged seeds. If they had left them the breeze would have carried them to the lawns and gardens, where they are not wanted, and to the waste places which the pretty yellow flowers adorn.

A long time ago a homesick man of woman from Scotland planted a few seeds of the bonny yellow broom at Beacon Hill, and now it grows wherever the land is not cultivated. If, on a sunny Autumn day, you stop your play and listen, you will hear the seed pods bursting, and if you watch carefully you will see that the seeds have been thrown some distance, far enough away to find a place to grow.

On one of the empty lots there were hundreds of burdock plants in spring, but before the blossoms came out someone mowed the tops off. He was a public benefactor. If the burs had been allowed to ripen, they would have been carried away by everyone who passed—on stockings, suits or fur, and dog or puss. A child or man would have planted their seeds far and wide. In the country the poor sheep carry them in their wool till they get rid of their tormentors on some tree or fence.

Between the rocks some of you gathered the tiny pink blossoms of the wild geranium or crane-bill in the Spring. As you sat by a little later you may have noticed the long, pointed bill, at the bottom of which the seed was hidden, till the bill split and threw it around to make the pretty carpet a little wider next Spring.

If you have California poppies growing in your garden you will notice another such seed vessel.

Sometimes the seeds make quite a noise when escaping. The great German poet, Goethe, told a story about such a seed vessel. He had gathered some capsules of Acanthus mollis and placed them in a box. In the night he was awakened by a crackling noise, followed by a sound as if a number of small bodies struck the walls and ceiling. These were the seeds that were thrown from the capsules and scattered over the room.

But, after all, the distance such seeds go is not very great. In old school books there were these lines of Mrs. Hemans:

The sea-snatched isle is the home of men,
And mountains exult
Where the wave hath been.

The water is the great carrier of seeds. The waterproof coat of the coconut allows it to float on the waves from the mainland to the coral islands, where it finds a lodging place, and birds following in its branches bear smaller seeds to clothe the rocks with verdure.

Have you ever come across the squirrel's board of nuts or the juncos' cache of ears? The little thrushes will leave part of their booty to Spring up in the solitary place where no eye sees them. In a few weeks the ground along many of our streets will be covered with horse chestnuts, and already the winged seeds of the maple are ready to go forth on the Autumn breeze, while the thistle seeds are falling ready to take root as soon as the rain moistens the earth.

It would take many pages and far more knowledge than your editor has to tell of all the wonderful devices with which the seeds of plants have been endowed. Each species possesses that one which can best preserve its life.

Nothing has been said of those seeds which we call grain and which have been given man for food, but it is hoped some of you will study for yourselves the stories that have been written about plants and the seeds from which they spring.

Picture of Autumn

Then came the Autumn all in yellow clad,
As though he joy'd in his plentiful store.
Laden with fruits that made him laugh, full glad.

That he had banish hunger, which to fore
Had by the belly oft him pinched sore.
Upon his head a wreath, that was enroll
With ears of corn of every sort, he bore.
And in his hand a sickle he did hold;
To reap the ripen'd fruits which the earth had gold.

The Old Paths in Central Africa

TODAY many eyes and thoughts are turned to Central Africa, of which none of us know much. Some years ago an interesting article by Suzanne Cramer appeared in Chambers' Journal from which the following extracts are taken.

"I love them, all those 'old paths' they are so very, very old—worn by the feet of those who are dead long, long ago. They have been there for generations—centuries in some cases. For in many parts of Central Africa there are no other roads but these old narrow paths winding in all directions, round, seldom up hills, down the valleys, through forests, but for them trackless, over desolate moors, and by lakes and rivers—never straight. An East African always goes round any obstacle in his way, never tries to remove it. A small bush, a high tuft of grass, a high stone in the way, and the path goes winding round these so the zig-zag paths always seem to lead to something new in the scenery.

"The native of the village knows these paths well, having trodden them all his life. First as a small child with toddling steps, holding out fast to his mother, looking up at the bright, burning eyes of childhood at the view around. Then as a boy running along the same path, intent on games, going to set traps for birds or small beasts, to trouble some school for him. Next as a young man setting out on a search for danger, game, antelope, bush-buck, or with comrades to carry home a warbling, the best of inyama (meat), if they are fortunate enough to get it. "Later on as a mature man going over the same 'old paths' on a warpath this time—leaping, bounding, shouting, with the grand deep-throated shout of the East African, the sound coming over the hills and valleys, and again—returning with still more triumphant shouts and yells, laden with his trophies from his successful raids, to be met with screams of delight by his womenkind and all his relations and friends.

"Then later—oh, much later—some more over the same 'old paths' with no bounding step now, but slow, weak and tottering, and looking with dim eyes over the familiar landscape, soon to be seen no more. There is nothing more pathetic than old age in East Africa. The old have had a good, a very good time in their own situation, but it is all over now, there is nothing beyond. These well-known paths will soon be trodden by them no more; other feet—youth, young feet—will tread them. And thus the world goes on. "Not always by human feet are these 'old paths' made. For in their fair among the reeds and rushes the hippo makes a path to the nearest deep river, stream or lake. A path too, it is, as if made by a steam roller—firm, hard, wide and well beaten down. Other beasts take advantage of it. The lion, after his midday sleep, when he wakes up hungry and thirsty, goes down this path to drink from the pool, looking for his prey, elephants, and sometimes a herd of them, use it too, though they have already made their own wide paths through the forest, and so it is not safe for humans to follow these paths. At time, however, no other way but to tread them is possible."

What was the original cost of each?

New Range Experimental Station in B. C. Dry Belt

In order to promote the welfare of the range livestock industry of Canada, the Dominion Department of Agriculture has established a Range Experimental Station at Kamloops. The establishment of this station is intended to bring about the introduction and development of economic practices in the management of ranges and of the livestock grazing on them.

Investigations into the conditions of the ranges, in British Columbia and of the livestock industry, and their management have been conducted during the last five years under the direction of Dr. E. S. Archibald, Director of the Dominion Experimental Farms. This work was personally supervised in the field by L. B. Thomson, who was officer in charge of the Dominion Range Experimental Station at Kamloops, Alberta, and now superintendent of Swift Current Experimental Station, and has resulted in the establishment of the Kamloops station.

The Transimule River watershed embraces all range types peculiar to the ranges of the interior of British Columbia, including areas of overgrazed Spring and Fall range that are representative of the overgrazed low ranges of the interior. This watershed, consequently, presents opportunities to initiate, develop and study methods of grazing ranges that are timbered in varying degrees of density, and to study methods of utilizing the forage crops of overgrazed bench grass lands and at the same time restore them to something like their original carrying capacity. Besides, there is available in this area an ideal herd of range stock, issued by the Provincial Government, which can be used to demonstrate the practices introduced by the station.

Experienced Operators

THE work at the Kamloops Range Station is under the supervision of Dr. E. S. Archibald, who has had previous experience in the forest service of the Western States, and E. W. Tudale, formerly assistant agrostologist at the Manyberries Range Experimental Station.

An agreement has been entered into between the Dominion Experimental Farms Branch and the Government of British Columbia, covering, in a broad way, the points essential to the successful development of the station and of its services to the owners of range livestock.

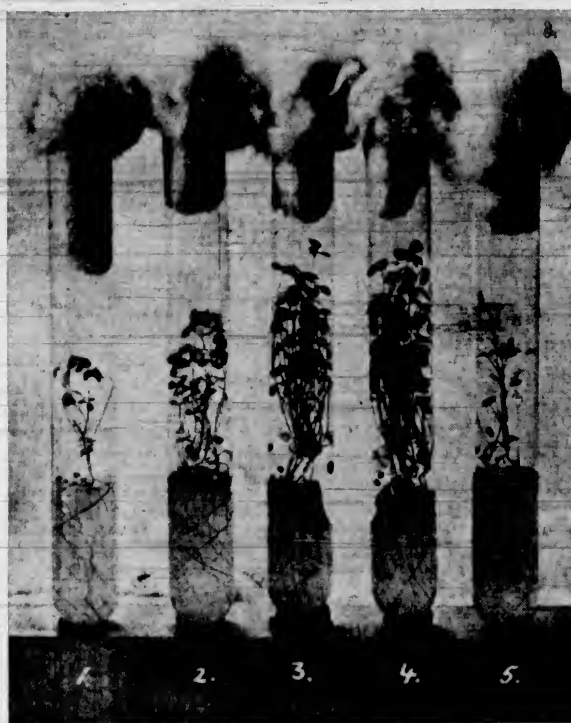

The principal activities of the new station include: The handling of cattle in accordance with the seasonal requirements of the range in order to obtain more efficient use of the Spring and Fall ranges with proper conservation methods; to promote further and better use of Summer ranges and to extend the use of all ranges to reduce winter feed costs; the study of definite valuing plans in promoting further range use; the development of watering places, and investigation of the activities of cattle on the range. These activities also include a study of the response of cattle to the range with regard to seasonal gains, comparative gains of all ages, and the comparison of Summer with Winter gains; a study of the improvement of the calf crop by the proper distribution of bulls, by proper management plans, and by the establishment of controlled breeding ranges; and a study of the effect of breeding yearling heifers on the growth and weight of the calf crop.

Other Investigations

INVESTIGATIONS into the character and value of the range forage will be undertaken. A careful analysis of all the principal forage plants is now under way. Special attention is being given to the study of plants suspected of containing poisonous properties injurious to livestock.

It is intended that later on the work will include studies of value to range sheepmen. This new range experimental station will render a much-needed service in securing definite data concerning the British Columbia ranges and in solving many problems with which the livestock industry has had to contend for many years.

Organisms Play Important Part in Crop Production

By E. C. REID
(Dominion Experimental Station, Banff, Alberta)

"MATTER is indestructible. Nothing really is ever lost." Or so we have been told, and that law is of particular significance to agriculturists. Farmers, perhaps, in a better position than most to follow the endless cycle of our food supply as it is being passed along a seemingly endless chain. At it is used by one group in nature's system, it is changed by another group to the next. In consuming it for its own use, each group in turn makes it available for the succeeding one, and the last returns it to the first. An endless chain, aptly termed the "cycle of life," is thus constantly at work tearing down and building up nature's raw materials. At one end we have the lovely soil-organisms in their thousands and millions, tirelessly transforming some waste product into some usable form; then it is sent along on its upward cycle (or so we think), to ultimately supply energy for nature's supposedly greatest creation—man.

In accepting nature's gift of food, man is in duty bound to see that after it has been utilized it is returned to the common store. Man realizes that all soil manipulation has as its ultimate goal the stimulation of green plants. And if he would coordinate his efforts with those of nature, he should at least have some knowledge concerning his unseen allies, the soil organisms.

Three Major Divisions

SOIL organisms can be roughly divided into three major divisions, the higher fungi, the yeasts and the bacteria. Each has a specific work to do, all contributing to the cycle of life and the maintenance of the world's food supply. Classified with the higher fungi we find the moulds, the mushrooms and the bacteria. They consist of a branching thread-like body, the mycelium and the reproductive bodies, the spores. These higher fungi, by means of the mycelium, penetrate the coarser particles of humus in the soil and gradually break down the cellulose and fibre. Other organisms later enter and continue the work of decomposition. The ordinary moulds, well-known nuisances to the housewife in her preserves, play an important part in the decomposition of organic matter in the soil. Most of us associate yeast with bread-making and a few of the more jovial folk consider yeast a prerequisite for a good "bouquet" in wine making. But yeasts, like the fungi, have a definite role to perform in nature's soil activities. They are found near the surface of soils and break down that humus material rich in sugars, following closely in the chemical enzymatic action whereby the starches are broken down into sugars. Soil yeasts are classified as microscopic plants, oval or spherical in shape and multiply by dividing, differing in this respect from the fungi.

Most Important Group

THE third and most important group of soil organisms are the bacteria. They are generally accorded the distinction of being the smallest living things, some measuring 1-150,000 of an inch in length. When one reaches 1,300 of an inch it is considered quite large. One point of differentiation from the yeasts is that bacteria reproduce by divisions rather than by budding. As mobile producers on legumes they are well known to the farmer and their soil-enriching tendencies are generally appreciated by agriculturists. Knowledge concerning their nitrogen fixation is pretty widely spread, and we need not touch on that phase of their activities at this time. In the decomposition of organic matter, they help in breaking down the proteins, liberating nitrogen. Dr. Laird, soil bacteriologist at the University of British Columbia, has found that one group called the Actinomyces (which, by the way, have many characteristics in common with the fungi) are responsible for much of that "earthy" odor well known to ploughmen. One member of this group also causes scab on potatoes.

By proper soil management as drainage, hilling, efficient tillage and intelligent rotation, all these soil organisms can be induced to play their part in producing good crops. It is up to the farmer, however, to co-operate with these unseen allies by creating optimum conditions for them, if he would receive the greatest economic returns from his soil.

Small Amounts of Soil May Be Sterilized

IN preparing flower beds, the gardener who will go to the trouble of "cooking" the soil first can laugh afterwards when his neighbors despair in their efforts to keep the weeds down. Soil sterilized by "cooking" is weedless.

An inexpensive method of sterilizing small amounts of garden soil is as follows: Fill a washbasin with soil, wet it pretty thoroughly, set it on bricks and build a fire under it. To keep the steam from escaping, cover the top with old bags or carpet. For an indicator to tell when the soil is thoroughly cooked, lay a raw potato on top of the soil. When the potato is well done you can be pretty sure that the soil is well sterilized. This usually takes about two hours.

The most striking advantage of cooked soil is its complete freedom from weeds. Other advantages are the partial prevention of damping off, and perhaps certain other fungous diseases.

A layer of this baked soil, spread three inches thick over your regular garden soil, will be enough to keep weed seed in the soil underneath from coming up through. But weeds roots, however, are another matter. They can send up sprouts from almost any depth; hence it is well to pick out a piece of ground that is free from perennial weed roots, or else cut these roots out down to a depth of eight inches.

Improving Celery Quality By Feeding and Blanching

CELERY is now growing strongly, and will need considerable attention if the best results are to be achieved. It is a moisture-loving plant, and so will require regular and copious supplies of water, even to the extent of a thorough soaking every other day in dry weather. A mere surface wetting is worse than useless; the water must get down to the full depth of the roots to keep the plants growing steadily without any check.

It is scarcely possible to overfeed celery, and, indeed, usually the plants are given far too little liquid stimulant. A weekly application of diluted cow or sheep manure will maintain healthy progress, and will tend to build up the solid, crisp stems which meet with so much appreciation in Winter. A bag of cow manure or sheep droppings, immersed in a tank or tub of water, will provide a very large quantity of diluted liquid, as very little is needed in a moderate-sized can of water. It should be replaced with a fresh supply when it has become too weak to be of value.

Value of Soot Dressings

SOOT is of untold assistance to this crop, both as a stimulant and as an insecticide. An occasional watering with diluted soot water—prepared in the same way as recommended for manure water—will give the foliage a deep, healthy green color, while the dry soot will go far to deter the dreaded celery fly. For this latter purpose it should be applied as a very fine dusting on the mornings of days that give promise of sunshine. Endeavor to cover as much leaf surface as possible, and also scatter the soot in the trenches and between the stems. Do not wait until the pest appears, but work in accordance with the proverb that prevention is better than cure.

Spraying with clear water on the evenings of fine days has a beneficial influence upon the plants, and where a small quantity only is given, it is not a very arduous undertaking. The trenches and the surrounding ground must at all times be kept free from weeds, as if these are permitted to obtain an ascendency they will rob the plants of much necessary food, and will also cause weak and spindly growth.

Blanching Is Important

THE very important operation of blanching calls for attention. The earliest celery is already partially moulded up, but that intended for ordinary Winter use should now be in full growth and the plants must not have any soil drawn around them until they have attained a considerable size. Too early attention to this respect is a very common mistake and one that causes much evil. Each plant should be gathered up in one hand by the operator, and any side growths of short leaves must be stripped away. Lay a strand of broad straw or passed loosely round the stems. Some fine soil may then be placed round the plant to a depth of about six inches, but this must be carefully done in order to assure that no empty spaces remain and that the stem is completely and closely surrounded by soil. This quantity of soil will suffice for a fortnight, and is sufficient to keep the plant in an erect position. It is, of course, advisable to tie up and prepare a trench before any soil is brought into use, and the operation should be carried out when the soil is moderately dry.

At the expiration of a fortnight another two or three inches of soil may be added, and so on, at intervals, until the work is completed. The greatest care must be taken that no soil falls into the centre or between the stems of the plants, as this may cause decay, especially if the Autumn and Winter should prove excessively wet or cold.

When the final moulding up is completed, the soil being brought to a sharp ridge close under the leaves, the sides of the ridges must be made flat and moderately firm with the back of a spade so that rain will be thrown off. It is not easy to say exactly when the moulding up of celery should commence, but certainly not until the grower thinks his plants have nearly completed their growth.

Pruning of Old Canes of the Rambler Roses

By DEAN HALLIDAY

THOSE of us who have climbing roses have very little pruning to do. These climbers merely require a little thinning out each year, and if any shoots become too long, they can easily be shortened to keep within bounds. The reason these climbing teas do not require much pruning is because the flowers are born on twigs of the older wood.

Just the opposite is true of the rambler or Wichuriana climber, with small clusters of flowers. These varieties should be pruned of both wilted blooms and old canes after they finish their blooming period.

The old canes can be cut back to the base, or to a point where a strong new shoot has grown out of the old cane. On this type of climber the flowers are produced only on the new wood. A few old canes may be left to train over the top of the arbor or trellis, if one desires, but there will be very few blooms on these.

The hardy climbers such as Jacote, Dr. Van Fleet, Silver Moon, Paul Scarlet and Breeze-Hill should not be trimmed in this fashion, for they do not bloom as well when vigorously pruned.

Cod Liver Oil Is Found Beneficial to Avoid Crippling in Pigs

IT has been found, at the Dominion Experimental Station, Scott, Saskatchewan, that pigs fattened in August and allowed to run outside until cold weather, will usually grow through the Winter without crippling, while the pigs fattened at the same time and confined to buildings become crippled early in the Winter.

During the Winter of 1934-35, August-fattened pigs which had been denied direct sunlight were fed alfalfa meal at the rate of 10 per cent of the chop mixture, another lot received one ounce of cod liver oil per pig daily in the chop, while a third lot was used for a check by feeding the same ration without either supplement.

At the end of sixty-one days the check lot was badly crippled and had gained only 0.11 of a pound per pig per day. The lot getting alfalfa meal gained 0.69 of a pound per pig daily, and the cod liver oil lot made a daily gain of one pound per pig.

Gained Weight With Oil

ALFALFA meal and cod liver oil were fed to the pigs, which had received no supplement, were fed one ounce of cod liver oil per pig daily, with the result that the crippled condition disappeared, and during the first thirty days the average gain per pig was thirty-four pounds. In a cooking test, pork from the cod liver oil lot has been found to taste of the oil unless about six weeks have elapsed from the time of discontinuing the oil until the pigs were killed for pork. However, if the oil is fed during the early part of the feeding period, it is not necessary during the final six weeks before reaching market weight.

Alfalfa hay or meal has the advantage of leaving no objectionable flavor in the pork and may be fed until the pigs are ready for market, but in this test did not produce as high a gain as cod liver oil, 0.61 of a pound per pig daily.

The cost of alfalfa meal used was $2.45 per hundred pounds and cod liver oil was $1 per gallon. Pichard oil was tested against cod liver oil in previous tests and found to be equally effective, and it usually sells cheaper.

Cover Cropping in Fall Found Beneficial to Raspberry Patches

IN past years the attention given to raspberry patches after the picking season was over has consisted chiefly of a few cultivations to loosen up the soil after the tramping it had received from picking operations. Experiments, conducted at the Dominion Experimental Farm at Agassiz, B.C., lead to the belief that more detailed operations can be beneficially applied, consisting chiefly of cutting out the old fruiting wood and seeding down a Fall cover crop. The advantage to be obtained from cutting out the fruiting wood is the removal of a very considerable portion of diseased material, especially cane blight infections. This disease, under field conditions, can be best recognized in canes with short lateral canes which have died prematurely, and by flattened, somewhat smoky-colored bark tissue near the base, at which point the cane will readily snap off. In pruning operations, a rigid practice of cutting canes off at the ground level should be followed, thus assuring the removal of as large a part as possible of infected wood.

Work at the Agassiz farm has indicated that in following this method cane blight can be kept under control and that no increased Winter injury results to the plants. When a patch has been cleaned up the soil between the rows should be cultivated, leveled off as much as possible, and seeded down in Fall. The growth of the cover crop is about eighteen inches high, it should be ploughed down by throwing towards the row. During Summer cultivations the soil should be leveled down as much as possible and by Fall it should be completely level in order to induce a deeper rooting habit of the plants. Cover cropping at the Agassiz Experimental Farm has proved beneficial in cutting down on Winter injury.

Stake the Good Potato Plants for Seed Tubers

POTATO tubers do not cross. They reproduce true to type. The only way to obtain a potato cross is through the seed balls, which sometimes form on the vines, and that method of propagation is practically never resorted to unless by someone interested in originating a new variety. Tubers are not really seed, although commonly so-called, but are a vegetative part of the plant. Therefore, the tubers are not intercrossed in the operations of digging, handling, storage and planting; the variety will not be some mixture (unless by the rare chance of a sport), no matter how closely to another kind it may be grown. Think one may confidently select seed tubers in the seedling, that like will produce like.

There is a difference in the vigor of strains, stocks and hills. Whether this difference is wholly due to the influence of disease, or is to some extent inherent, may be left to the plant pathologists and the geneticists to decide. The practical fact is that some potato plants are more vigorous and productive than others and that in reproducing from these the possibilities of profit are increased.

If one will, during the Summer, stake a number of the best hills (being careful to avoid, not only stunted or unhealthy plants, but also those exhibiting the abnormally large top growth known as giant hills) and will see that any neighboring plants suspected of harboring virus diseases are promptly pulled and destroyed, and if he will then follow up this effort by a further rigorous inspection of the tubers when dug, he may improve his seed stock or at all events may arrest the running-out process which occurs when disease is allowed to creep in unchecked.

More Than Two Hundred Varieties of Dahlias on Farm at Hillbank

THE dahlia is rapidly taking a prominent place in the flower gardens of Vancouver Island. This shows and free-blooming flower is easily grown, and is fast becoming a favorite with many of the amateur gardeners.

Until now, the great drawback has been that the dahlia does not last long as a cut flower, and for the reason it has not held much prominence for purposes of interior decorating. So great has been the demand for types of dahlias which will last well as cut flowers, that many new varieties are being put on the market. The large varieties, while having their place in the garden, are giving way to the smaller and more lasting types, especially those known as "Miniature Decoratives" and "Charms," which are used for interior decorative purposes. These new varieties, being very easy to grow, are the earliest to start flowering, and not only do they give more blooms but last longer in water as cut flowers.

Just outside the farm at Hillbank, on the Island when the demand for dahlias increased, we find dahlia farms springing up to meet the demand for new varieties.

An Enterprising Grower

ONE of these enterprising dahlia growers, O. G. Saunders, has a small place about five miles north of Cowichan, called Rapids View Dahlia Farm. This farm derives its name from a beautiful view overlooking a three-hundred-foot canyon of the Koksilah River.

Some years ago, Mr. Saunders came from the Prairies looking for a quiet spot to settle down, and selected this place, overlooking a wide expanse of the beautiful Cowichan Valley. Here it is secluded, and yet only a mile from the Hillbank Station.

It is just two years since he started raising dahlias to any extent, and he now has some 250 varieties, including forty varieties of "Miniature Decoratives" and "Charms," and 140 varieties of "Decoratives," "Cactus" and "Hybrid Cactus." Each is carefully chosen for its special features.

The selection of dahlias from this farm has won first place for two consecutive years at the Duncan Fair, and it is expected that entries will be made in Victoria this year.

Among his collection there are some varieties especially imported from England, and of these, Baby Royal and Elstree are outstanding. Baby Royal, a beautiful pink, is best suited to interior decoration, and will stand up exceedingly well under artificial light. Elstree is a very beautiful cerise-pink.

Because of the soil, Mr. Saunders has found it possible to keep his plants remarkably free from disease, and a shipment sent to England this year passed the customs inspection without showing a trace of disease.

The tubers possess a remarkable vitality, and after being stored all Winter in the cellar they remain just as firm as the day they were placed there. The healthy condition of the tubers is attributed to the fact that when stored they are hung upside down, so no moisture will collect in the hollow stem. Here most of the damage is done, for should rot set in and damage the crown, then the tubers are useless, because they merely contain stored up plant food. It is the crown which produces the shoots, and even should it be partly injured the result will be weak plants.

Vitality Essential

THE size of the tuber makes little difference in the hardness of the plant if it has the vitality. A little tuber will throw just as strong a shoot, and probably just as healthy a plant, as a large one, although there will not be as many shoots. In proof of this, a little tuber two inches long, which happened to be sprouting among some of the others in Mr. Saunders' cellar was throwing a healthy shoot two feet long and was still firm.

From August 25 to September 25, Rapids View Dahlia Farm will present a pretty sight.

The larger part of this collection of dahlias, the "Decoratives," "Cactus" and "Hybrid Cactus," will be at their best. Visitors to Rapids View Dahlia Farm are always welcome, and Mr. Saunders leaves nothing undone to make one feel at home.

Sanitation Will Check Most Turkey Ills

THE young growers who are losing many young turkeys as a result of blackhead trouble can check its ravages by a strict programme of sanitation. There is no certain remedy for blackhead, but it may be prevented and checked by sanitary measures. Young turkeys should not be ranged with old ones, or on ground where chickens have been kept, because chickens, apparently, are instrumental in spreading disease. It is suggested that roundworms be kept down by adding tobacco dust to the ration in the proportion of two per cent for a few weeks. Turkey coops should be moved at weekly intervals in order that the young turkeys may run over new ground. Moving birds from one yard to another every week or two so that they do not come back to the same yard often, than once a month has proved effective.

Where turkeys are herded they should be taken out in a new direction each day to keep them in uninfected ground.

Diseased birds should be killed and burned or buried deeply as soon as blackhead is noticed, and the rest of the flock should be placed on clean ground. Blackhead is indicated by dullness, inability to keep up with the flock, loss of appetite, drooping wings and sulphur-colored diarrhoea. Young birds usually live only a few days after showing symptoms.

Poulters that have been kept too long indoors this Spring are showing leg weakness, which sunshine or cod liver oil will prevent. Another form of leg weakness characterized by enlarged hocks, crooked toes and slipped tendons is due to too much mineral in the ration. Where meat scrap and milk are used in the mash, there is enough mineral present. If minerals such as bone meal and limestone are to be fed, they should not be added to the mash, but should be fed separately so the poulters will eat just what they need.

Ethiopia Presents Forbidding Aspect

Duce's Way of Elevating Italy to Class A Power

In the Zoological Gardens in Rome there is a tawny lioness, now ten years old or more, which was once the pet and playmate of Benito Mussolini. As a cub it was his constant companion in the Palazzo Venezia or the Chigi Palace. It was the symbol that Premier Hermann Wilhelm Goering of Prussia aped in Nazi Germany.

Many times Mussolini has been photographed with this lioness; many times it has been announced that it was the symbol that the Italian people had chosen for their new leader.

To the world Mussolini has from the beginning presented a lordly, lionine aspect. He has insisted that he is a nation respected and feared. Nothing less than a lion would have suited as a mascot for such a leader.

Thus it is that Mussolini has frequently ignored and annulled the lions of Europe. There has never been any incident quite as grave as the Ethiopian affair, but many, many times it has been announced that the lion was the symbol that the Italian people had chosen for their new leader.

Next came his demands for naval parity with France, demands which virtually wrecked the London Naval Conference of 1930 and caused a breach between Paris and Rome which remains to be healed. Then his armaments, revealed in his own words, revealed to the world in its full extent only during the past few years, contributed to European distrust and fear of fascism.

By angering the world powers, which Mussolini does seriously and by design wherever he feels he can gain by it, he has achieved his fondest desire—the recognition of Italy as a Class A power.

All Eyes on Rome

His national triumphs—the signing of the Lateran Treaty which ended a sixty-year-old breach between Church and State in Italy, the restoration of national unity and discipline, the salvation of the Pontine marshes and the construction of cities on terrain thought useless and long ago abandoned; the achievement of taking Yugoslavia and throwing them into enthusiastic military training—have been matters of keen satisfaction to him. But even more gratifying has been the fact that in recent years almost every European crisis has merged European eyes to Rome.

It was with the rise of Hitlerism in Germany. The world waited anxiously to see whether Mussolini would cast his lot with the Austro-German camp, or whether he would, as he had done in the past, follow the path of a European statesman.

He declared, "The Fascist bloc" as long feared in Europe has yet to coalesce.

Austrian Crisis

It was the same in July, 1934, when a group of Austrian Nazis murdered Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss in an abortive coup d'état in Vienna. Mussolini was the first to rush troops to the Austrian frontier. For a little while it appeared that war was inevitable. But Mussolini, having convinced Germany that interference in Austrian affairs would mean conflict with Yugoslavia, and that peace returned, at least temporarily.

There has been other similar manifestations of Italian power and might. Outstanding is the Italian conflict with Yugoslavia, an ancient and hated enemy. The newspapers of the nation which before the war was Serbia revived old stories of Italian cowardice in the world conflict. Front-page articles, castigating Italy appeared in Belgrade, Budapest and elsewhere. Italian consular officials were derided and in some cases attacked.

Mussolini Acts

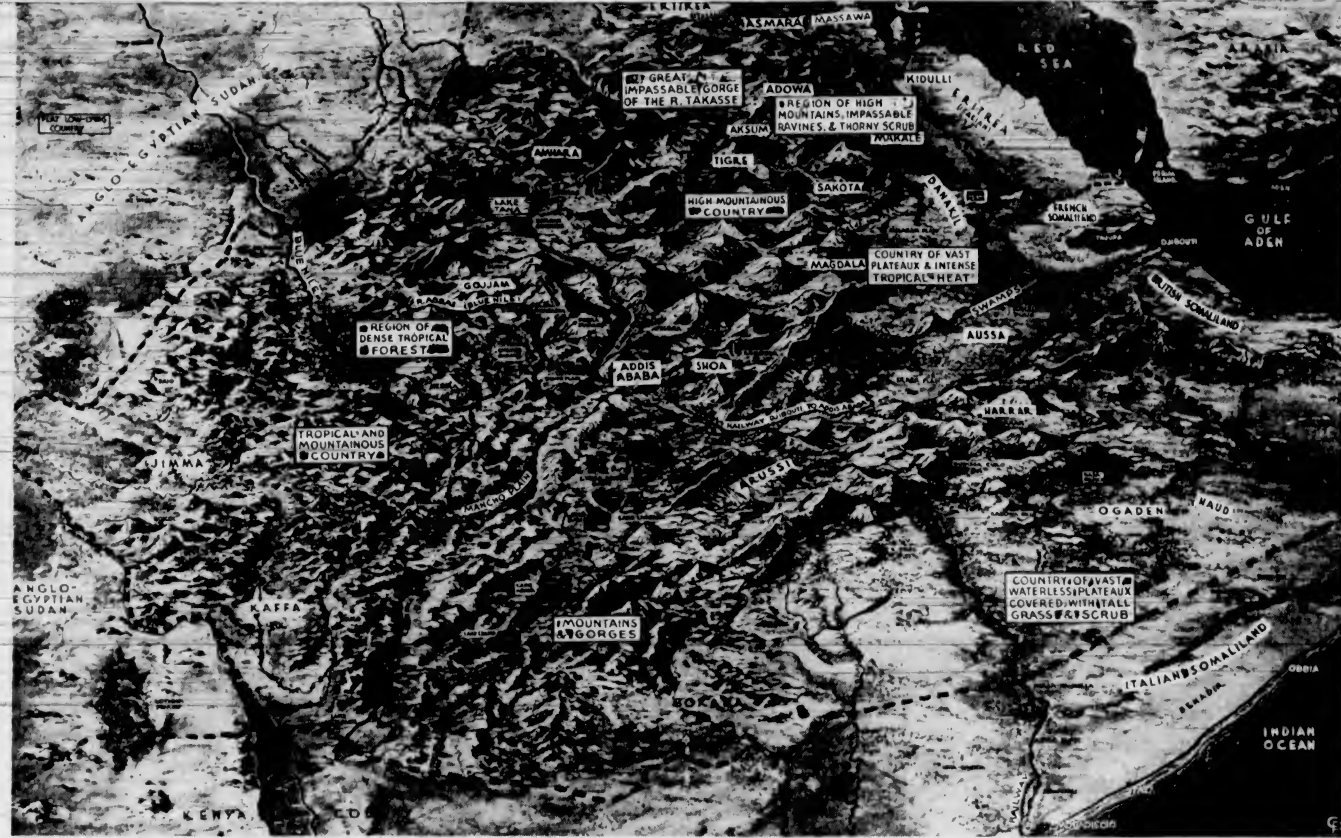

Mussolini did not long ignore the situation. Paper protests have never been enough. He started out to review military encampments near the Yugoslav border. Standing on glacisades or on towers he delivered a series of blistering speeches. He spoke deprecatingly of Italy's "pitiful" armies, waved his strong arm northward and spoke of possible revision of Versailles from the frontiers upon which Yugoslavia as well as the rest of the post-war national creations are dependent for their existence.

His strategy was successful. The Yugoslav frontier ceased as suddenly as they had begun. European nations, like ordinary mortals, are fearful of a lion aroused.

Pinnacle at Stresa

It was at Stresa, Italy, this Spring that Mussolini reached his highest pinnacle—host-nations, which came to him begging guarantees in a united front against the spectre of German rearmament. Hitler had issued his latest pronouncement of March 16, re-establishing universal conscription and tearing up the Treaty of Versailles. Geneva was helpless. Paris and London were close to panic.

To Mussolini they turned, and it

Duce received them at the historic castle of Borromeo, on Isola Bella in Lago Maggiore. It was then he told them frankly and unequivocally that a reunited Europe was no longer a specter but a reality. It was then he made known Italy had 500,000 men under mobilization orders and close to nine million ready to take the field. It was then he announced emphatically that disarmament was as dead as the great vertical column—he used the very word—and called upon the statesmen of Europe to face the facts.

He cautioned against "excessive optimism," warned that "Stresa should not be a road to a new peace." "Nothing is sadder," Mussolini, the realist, said, "than the disillusion which follows illusions rendered false by false desire."

Convinced Europe

The British and the French were long ago convinced that they had been deceived by a promise for united action. He did not count himself precisely to this effect, but he did convince the Allies that disarmament was in the disarray. The French increased their term of military service, appropriated additional millions for defense. The British formally rejected disarmament, announced plans for an air force triple the strength of that of 1935, and severed notice that he would no longer consider the ratios or limitations of naval treaties binding.

In the Mussolini lexicon Stresa, though now almost forgotten, became his greatest triumph. He convinced Europe that peace without arms is a chimera; that peace can be achieved only with guns and bullets.

Makes Sudden Decision

He made no mention of Ethiopia or his plans in East Africa, although they must have long been brewing. Doubtless he decided upon actually launching this expedition suddenly. He has frequently made his most important decisions in the spur of the moment, while horseback riding, driving his high-powered automobile or piloting his own plane. He is essentially a man of action. Stresa guaranteed an armistice period at least. It left him free to turn his thoughts elsewhere. Nothing was more logical than to choose this moment to open, if possible, the closed doors of Abyssinia, potentially the wealthiest territory of northern Africa.

Mussolini Relied More on Conscription Than On Loyal Fascist

The nation which rules war out as the ultima ratio is lost.

Long ago Benito Mussolini spoke these words—long before he became the Duce of Italy, long before he alarmed the world with a sabre-rattling speech since has become expected of him.

Thus it cannot be surprising that he lost little time, after the triumph of October, 1922, in utilizing his Blackshirts as the basis of an armed force—today has only one superior in numbers, the Red Army of Soviet Russia.

By his own word, Mussolini today could pit nine million men in the field. They would not all be young—and many would not be old enough to man a machine gun—but they would be fighters, trained to sacrifice and to discipline.

His Doctrine Is Force

Development of the Italian army began in 1919, when Mussolini began to organize his Blackshirts, and has continued without cessation to the present day. Every Fascist is, by personal pledge to the Duce, a fighter prepared to be called up for service at a moment's notice. Every adult man and boy in the kingdom receives military training. They have been taught to believe that in force of arms lies power and discipline.

For my part, I prefer fifty thousand men to five million votes," Mussolini once said. There is the doctrine of his nationalism—force, and power that may be used when necessary.

It has been said that Mussolini has weakened his resources in Europe by sending a quarter of a million men to East Africa to browbeat Ethiopia into acceptance of his demands for room to colonize and territory to develop in Abyssinia.

All Must Serve

This is problematical. Mussolini once asked for 50,000 rifles. Today he has at his disposal a standing army of more than 500,000 men—the figure has been put by some experts at 650,000. He has thirty-five classes of reserves from twenty-one to fifty-five years of age, totaling 6,500,000 men. The laws of his nation demand that each of these serve eighteen months—today has only one superior in numbers, the Red Army of Soviet Russia.

Well-Dressed Cakes Wear Fluffy Icings

By KATHARINE BAKER

Well-dressed women "take the cake" everywhere. And this year the well-dressed woman is inclined to be softly feminine but not elaborate in her dress—just good to look at. And so are her cakes.

The smart hostess doesn't pile elaborately used concoctions on her table trays. She serves perfectly made cake with simple, flattering icing. The frosting never looks as if it had been handled or poked, in weird shapes and designs, but rather as if it were quickly and cleverly used to top the cake.

Those perfect, ice-textured stand and butter cakes make into a variety of interesting concoctions by using unusual frostings.

Chocolate is a universal favorite for any sweet dish. Hungarian chocolate frosting can be kept in the refrigerator until it is needed and then spread on cakes that are still slightly warm. This softens the filling so that it will spread more easily.

Hungarian Chocolate Frosting

Four squares unsweetened chocolate, cut in pieces; two tablespoons hot water; two eggs; one cup confectioner's sugar; one half cup butter, melted in cold water to remove salt. Melt chocolate in double boiler, add hot water, and blend. Add eggs and sugar. Remove from fire, but allow mixture to stand over hot water, stirring constantly until it is slightly thickened (three minutes). Cool quickly to lukewarm. Add butter, two tablespoons at a time, stirring and blending after each addition.

Open Air Stage Is Popular

LONDON—One of London's greatest delights on sultry summer evenings is the Open Air Theatre in Regent's Park, now enjoying its third season. The stage has a perfect setting of tall trees and bushes, and the most entrancing effects can be obtained by means of flood lighting.

Recently Ben Jonson's masque "Chloridia" with Nini Thealdie an exquisite Queen Chloridia, was given in a double bill with "Milton's Comedy" and now "A Midsummer Night's Dream" has been revived, with Miss Thealdie as premiere danseuse, a part she played in the Reinhardt film.

Miss Hunt's charming-colored felt hat is bound in yarn and trimmed with a band of green grosgrain ribbon. Dark green Oxfords and a dull green suede bag complete her costume.

Curlers Used In Achieving New Coiffure

By GLADYS GLAD

Psychologists have asserted that there is nothing quite so exhilarating and stimulating to a woman as a new hat. According to them, a new coiffure is most effective in raising a woman's spirits and snapping her out of the doldrums. But I claim that the average girl gets even a greater kick out of a new coiffure. For, as a rule, women change their hats often than their hair styles.

It's the numerous tangles and curls involved in the newest coiffure that are mostly going to prove troublesome. Of course, the problem of fashioning these tangles isn't a problem at all if a girl can have the ends of her hair permanently waved in curls, but all girls can have this done. And so I will offer a suggestion.

To turn those hair ends up into ringlets, there is nothing better than the old-fashioned curlers, that were so commonly used in years past. They are simple, easy to use, and very effective in their results.

First Brush Hair

To use curlers properly, first brush your hair vigorously with a flexible-bristled brush. Then separate the hair ends into rather small

Needlework Interesting To Queen

Modern Etiquette

Household Hints

By JOAN LITTLEFIELD

LONDON—While the Court is at Balmoral, the Queen finds more time for needlework. A new flower design, somewhat complicated, in the rose pink, orange, hydrangea blue and beige color is Her Majesty's favorite. Colors have been prepared for her, and this in prospect will be worked for a series of loose "squirrel" cushions. These may be prepared for her at a copy of an eighteenth century design in green and gold point on a golden yellow background. The original covers a beautiful old chair in Kensington Palace belonging to Queen Elizabeth.

Doing Things With Veiling

Milners are "doing things" with veils this season. One prominent Paris hat designer, Made, who is the latest, clear down to the chin, and then gathers the remainder of the veil length on top of the hat in bows and loops.

Tatou uses them in place of other trimmings, but does things with them that he can't do with other trimmings. On a rather flat little felt brimmed hat he slips the veil under the ribbon band, veiling the front half of the brim and letting the netting dip over the eyes. The veil is then brought to the back, where it piles up in two great bows.

Molyneux likes his veiling all on top. On a pert little flower bonnet he put a doubled outstanding aureole of veil all round, in a black felt skull cap, on the other hand which is brought to a severe point front and back, he gathers a veil very full all around, heading it in the centre with a flat felt bow.

Veils are seductive things, and from these few examples of what the smartest milliners are doing with them, the woman whose budget won't allow her a new bonnet might away may see how she can rejuvenate an old one and make "tops" in fashion.

Velvet and Brocade Forecast as Evening Materials for Fall

By MOLLY MEHRICK

Copyright 1935, by The North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.

HOLLYWOOD—Tweeds are going to play an important part in your Autumn wardrobe, and, according to Hollywood designers, caps will be an accepted part of next winter's chic.

Marsha Hunt, one of Paramount's newest finds, shows you an advanced Fall street costume in green and white tweed, which combines the sports effect of a tweed suit and the shattering lines of an Autumn frock.

With this unusual coat dress, Miss Hunt wears a chambray colored hat that found in yarn and trimmed with a band of hunter's green grosgrain ribbon.

High-heeled dark green oxfords and a dull green suede bag complete this unusually smart Fall costume.

Bernard Newman, who designs the styles that R.K.O. film stars wear, makes a prediction about Fall styles.

Three-quarter and full-length coats, he says, will be popular for both sports wear and for dress.

Flared and boxed styles will be favored for evening and daytime wear. In fact, the vogue for flared dresses will extend even to fur, which will be cut as it were material.

Other changes in today's styles, noted by this fashion creator include shorter slacks for daytime wear and the best that evening dresses will just clean the floor.

All Renaissance costumes will be good, says Mr. Newman, both for day and evening frocks, and this includes the early, warm colors usually associated with Victorian dress.

In line with this announcement, Mr. Newman tells you that velvets and brocades will play a big part in popular fall fashions for evening wear, and metal, woods, metal jewelry, and goods with heavy rough textures will be tops for daytime wear.

Plans, he says, will take second place in the scheme of winter fashions.

Cheers to Hedda Hopper for the perfect red hat she wore at luncheon the other day at the Vendome.

It was one of those wool-straw hats that raised just the right note of unbroken color for autumn fashions. And it was trimmed with three parrot green quills that jutted forth in exactly the right angle for Miss Hopper's unusual charm.

A perfect black and white look and a tiny de laundie de la brilliant red beach made Hedda Hopper the smartest woman in a restaurant full of chic women.

Here and there in Hollywood we see, finger fingers, wearing tiny mesh-silver buttons to fasten a black dinner frock.

Katharine Hepburn, in a tailored suit with hand-stitched lapels on the jacket.

Julie Burke, in pajamas of flowered tulle, cut very full, with a long-sleeved jacket and flaring petticoat.

Joan Harlow, carrying a multi-pocketed suitcase, with a zipper fastening of gold trim which is a real work with leather printed on it at the top.

Kitty Carlisle, it has been in a navy-blue suit and blue straw hat that featured a bunch of Spring flowers. They're green. Very real in its deep green, both in front and back, and so different that most people would decide whether they liked it or not.

Take to Handball

LONDON—A new game for women—handball, introduced recently at the Women's Amateur Athletic Association's meeting—has a lot to recommend it.

It is an easy game to learn, and it is a very good exercise.

Another game, of a similar type, has been played for years in the United States. It is called "volleyball."
